Preface — IX

List of abbreviations — XIII

1 Introduction — 1
   1.1 The general aim of this book — 1
   1.2 The line of argument in broad brushstrokes — 3

2 “I want it all” — 10
   2.1 Substances, individuals, and other particulars — 10
   2.1.1 Early modern materialism and its appeal to substances — 10
   2.1.2 From substances to particulars: token physicalism — 14
   2.1.3 Numbers, deities, and other necessary beings — 19
   2.2 Moving on to properties — 21
   2.2.1 Wholly physical beings: type physicalism — 21
   2.2.2 Narrowly and broadly physical properties, fundamentality and dependence — 22
   2.2.3 Necessarily instantiated properties — 32
   2.2.4 Haecceitistic properties — 33
   2.2.5 Positive and negative properties — 38
   2.2.6 Relations — 40
   2.2.7 Relativizing to worlds — 42
   2.3 Summary — 43

3 “Physical” — 44
   3.1 Physical properties: a catalogue of constraints — 46
   3.2 A posteriori accounts of the physical — 51
   3.2.1 Hempel’s dilemma: trouble for currentists and futurists — 51
   3.2.2 How (not) to be a currentist: Andrew Melnyk’s account of the physical — 56
   3.2.3 How (not) to be a futurist: Jeffrey Poland’s and Janice Dowell’s accounts of the physical — 64
   3.3 A priori accounts of the physical — 73
   3.3.1 It is none of that stuff: the ‘via negativa’ — 73
   3.3.2 Jessica Wilson’s mixed view of the physical — 86
   3.3.3 Should physicalism be incompatible with panpsychism? — 88
   3.3.4 Robert Howell’s neo-Cartesian account — 91
3.4 A way out: reference-fixing accounts of the physical — 99
  3.4.1 Frank Jackson’s object-based reference-fixing account — 99
  3.4.2 Appeal to the common nature of physical properties: a property-based reference fixing account — 101
  3.5 Summary — 107

4 “The bare necessities” — 108
  4.1 Necessitation — 109
  4.1.1 Why necessitation is necessary for metaphysical dependence — 110
  4.1.2 Propositional necessitation and the contingency of physicalism — 111
  4.1.3 Property necessitation — 113
  4.2 Supervenience — 115
  4.2.1 Individual supervenience — 116
  4.2.2 Multiple domain supervenience — 120
  4.2.3 Global supervenience — 121
  4.3 Which supervenience claim is necessary for physicalism? — 127
    4.3.1 The contingency of physicalism, epiphenomenal ectoplasm and other extras — 127
  4.4 Can physicalism be fully characterized in purely modal terms? — 138
    4.4.1 The problem of blockers — 138
    4.4.2 Can supervenience be a metaphysical dependence relation? Considerations on formal characteristics — 143
    4.4.3 Necessitation without metaphysical dependence? Fine’s challenge to supervenience-based accounts of physicalism — 146
    4.4.4 Necessitation dualism and the supervenience of emergent properties — 148
    4.4.5 Explanation to the rescue of an ontological stalemate? — 152
    4.4.6 Necessitation dualism and Hume’s dictum — 155
  4.5 Summary — 162

5 “Higher Ground” — 163
  5.1 The characteristics of Grounding: Taking stock — 165
  5.2 Grounding and the zoo of ‘small-g’ grounding relations — 170
    5.2.1 Is Grounding the only game in town? — 170
    5.2.2 The higher-order property realization relation — 172
    5.2.3 The powers-based realization relation — 176
    5.2.4 The determinable-determinate relation — 180
5.3  No work for Grounding? — 184
  5.3.1  Grounding as a replacement for ‘small-g’ grounding relations — 185
  5.3.2  Full Grounding, partial Grounding, and the strong emergentist view — 187
  5.3.3  The priority argument: Grounding as a priority-fixing relation — 193
  5.3.4  The unity argument: Grounding as a unifier of ‘small-g’ grounding relations — 203
  5.4  Grounding Grounding — 213
     5.4.1  What Grounds Grounding? — 214
     5.4.2  Grounding Grounding in the natures of the relata — 215
     5.4.3  Lessons from the debate about Grounding Grounding — 221
  5.5  Summary — 224
