This book would not have been possible without the support of my colleagues Dobrila Djukich de Nery, Írida García de Molero and Alexander Mosquera, who also honour me with their friendship. Nor without the enthusiasm of my students of Anthropology, Social Communication, and Semiotics; and without the indispensable solidarity of my colleagues in Latin America, Europe and North America, where I have had the privilege of sharing and discussing many of the ideas and proposals that appear in these pages. Special thanks to my colleagues from the Venezuelan Association of Semiotics, the Latin American Federation of Semiotics, and the International Association for Semiotic Studies. The book would not have come to fruition without the understanding of the audiences who have attended my lectures to hear me speak about the multiple and varied meanings of the body, and whose interventions, suggestions and comments have enriched these pages. I also want to thank Gladys Sánchez Pirela and Ángela Carrasquero González for their thorough review of the manuscript, their suggestions, and bibliographic contributions. I also wish to thank de Gruyter and the International Association for Semiotic Studies (IASS), particularly its president, Paul Cobley, for the grant received to cover the translation costs of this text. Finally, I thank the young semiotician David Enrique Finol for the translation of this book and for his many insights and suggestions that contributed to updating my work.
