

Table of Contents

1.	Introduction	7
1.1.	A Private Passion – Bacon’s Attitude towards Photography	16
1.2.	State of Research	26
1.3.	Luck and Chance – Painting 1946 as a Case Study	32
1.4.	The Iceberg – Research Material and Definition of ‘Photographic Reference’	44
2.	The Studio – Analysis of the Working Environment	48
2.1.	‘A Little Corner of South Kensington’	48
2.2.	‘Cat in a Cage’ – Francis Bacon in Reece Mews	68
2.3.	‘A Heap of Broken Images’ – Preparatory Processes	85
2.4.	Drawing a Line – Drawings versus Photographs	127
3.	Comparative Analyses – Bacon’s Paintings and their Photographic References	139
3.1.	Spatial Setting and Photography	139
3.1.1.	Spatial Settings – Abstract, Elusive, Unreliable	140
3.1.2.	The Stage Set – Figure and Ground	157
3.2.	Figure and Photography	172
3.2.1.	‘Collage is not my medium’ – The Construction of the Figure	172
3.2.2.	Figure, Outline, Materiality – Closest to and Furthest Away from the Photograph	194
3.3.	Narrative, Identity and the Use of Photographs	211
3.3.1.	‘I don’t want to tell a story, I have no story to tell’	213
3.3.2.	Portrait and Identity – No Less than Life Itself	232
3.4.	Colour and Photography – ‘Colour is a most mysterious thing’	254

4.	Conclusion – ‘A Sponge that Absorbs Everything’	270
5.	Appendix	283
	Bibliography	285
	List of Pictorial References to Francis Bacon’s Paintings	308
	Acknowledgements	411
	Picture Credits	412
	Colour Plates	414
	Triptychs	444