This book is a result of the project “The Archives of Antisemitism in Scandinavia: Knowledge Production and Stereotyping in a Long-term Historical Perspective,” generously funded by the Swedish Research Council (Vetenskapsrådet) at the University of Gothenburg. I would like to thank Vetenskapsrådet, Göteborgs universitet, and the University of Greifswald for having made it possible for us to bring this project to a successful conclusion by allowing my affiliation with the history departments at both universities.

The funding allowed my project partner Jonathan Adams (Gothenburg/Copenhagen) and me to consolidate the networks and cooperation we have been fostering for research about antisemitism in Scandinavia in a historical perspective. One important part of this consolidation has been establishing the book series “Religious minorities in the North,” edited by Jonathan Adams, Christhard Hoffman, and me, for which we are grateful to the De Gruyter publishing house and their friendly and skilful staff. For the work on this volume, I would like to thank Robert Forke in particular.

I have received a lot of help, comments, and constructive criticism on this project, for which I would like to thank Christhard Hoffmann (Bergen/Oslo), Ulrich Wyrwa (Berlin), and Jonathan Adams. Jonas Nordin (Lund) has also been very helpful, as has the staff of Kungliga biblioteket/The Royal Library in Stockholm – particularly during the pandemic, their help with finding older prints and making them digitally available has been crucial. I have also had help with various aspects of the work from a number of student assistants. In particular, I would like to mention Paul Kirschstein, Josefine Guderian, and Erik Wolf. I would also like to thank Karl Levesque (Montreal) for copyediting this book at different stages.
