Acknowledgments

It would be impossible to name all the people who truly deserve my gratitude. Tragically, space limitations prevent me from giving elaborate, personalized descriptions of each person’s contribution.

Friends and colleagues, your time, patience, knowledge and sometimes daily support have been invaluable. I would like to thank Rafi Barzilay, Yael Berda, Dan Chyutin, Dan Ephron, Amir Fuchs, Gilad Halpern, Tania Hary, Riva Hocherman, Dina Kraft, Anshel Pfeffer, Adam Shinar, Esther Solomon, Yael Sternhell, Shibley Telhami, Nancy Updike, Dov Waxman (and the Nazarian Center at UCLA for hosting me as a non-resident visiting scholar). I am particularly grateful to those who invested precious time reading and commenting on chapters: Omar Dajani, David Kretzmer, Yehezkel Lein, Frances Raday, Meron Rapoport, Shira Robinson, Gershon Shafir, Noam Sheizaf, Limor Yehuda. Akin Ajayi read the whole thing! I am grateful to Noam Lehmann for research assistance for Sections II and III. All remaining errors, of course, are my responsibility alone.

Matt Qvortrup encouraged me to publish this with De Gruyter. No less important, he has been my academic champion, and an invaluable friend, for years.

My deep thanks to Thanassis Cambanis and to Michael Wahid Hanna for bringing me to Century International, where I developed many of the ideas and initial research for this book. It was a great privilege to work with Eamon Kircher-Allen, a pitch-perfect editor, on this book and at Century. My sincere thanks to Gerhard Boomgaarden, Michaela Göbels and Antonia Mittelbach of De Gruyter, for giving this project a home.

I owe the most to my family. Janice Meyerson gave me a gift that cannot be matched, volunteering her formidable professional skills to copyedit the entire book, at a breakneck pace, out of pure, selfless support. My father, Raymond Scheindlin, provided advice, analytic and intellectual feedback, and much-needed moral support, now and always.

I am very lucky to have Stanley Friedman in my life, a critical thinker about Israel, and pretty much everything else. My mother, Shira Scheindlin, has granted both material and non-material support, for this book and for life, with the love of a mother: Dov, Kat, Zeke, Lila—you keep my spirits alive.

https://doi.org/10.1515/9783110796582-001