Part I Towards a theoretical-descriptive approach to nominalization

Chapter 1: Introduction 3

Chapter 2: Theoretical assumptions 9

1. Language: The relation between system and usage 9
   1.1. A usage-based approach to language 11
   1.2. Cognitive Grammar: The interface between system and usage 11
   1.3. The language system as network 13

2. The natural symbolic relation between lexicogrammar and semantics 15
   2.1. A natural description of language 15
   2.2. The natural or non-arbitrary relation between grammar and meaning 17

3. Constructions: Composition, classification and function 19
   3.1. A functional approach to composition 20
   3.2. Levels of functional analysis 21
   3.3. A functional approach to classification 23
   3.3.1. An internal functional analysis of constructions 24
   3.3.2. Classes as complex categories: Schema and prototype 26
   3.4. Composition and classification: Conclusion 28

4. Functional layers of organization 29

5. Constructions and the relations between them 33
   5.1. Agnation and enation: A definition 35
   5.2. Agnation and enation: Theoretical significance and heuristic value 37

6. Theoretical assumptions: Conclusion 40

Chapter 3: Nominalization 41

1. A usage-based account of nominalization 42
   1.1. Schematization and extension 43
   1.2. Entrenchment 44
Contents

2. Nominalizations as non-arbitrary symbolic units 46
3. Nominalizations as composition and reclassification 47
3.1. Constructions as assemblies of symbolic units 48
3.2. Nominalization as functional reclassification 49
3.2.1. Rank shift and reclassification 49
3.2.2. Nominalization as functional reclassification 51
4. A multifunctional account of nominalization 52
5. The role of agnation in the analysis of nominalization 52
5.1. Networks of agnation 54
5.2. Agnation as a descriptive heuristic 55
5.3. The schematic nature of agnation 56
6. Towards a theoretical-descriptive approach to nominalization: Conclusion 58

Chapter 4: The functional organization of nominal and clause 61

1. From noun type specification to nominal 61
2. From process type specification to clause 70
2.1. The clausal head 72
2.1.1. Finite vs. atemporal clausal heads 73
2.1.2. The clausal head, Objects and Complements 76
2.2. Instantiation and quantification of the clausal head 78
2.3. Clausal grounding 81
2.3.1. The finite element 82
2.3.2. Person deixis 85
2.3.3. Clausal grounding: Conclusion 86
2.4. The speech-functional role of the Subject 87
2.5. The functional organization of nominal and clause: Conclusion 92
3. Nominalization as functional reclassification 94

Part II Deverbal -er nominalization

Chapter 5: Deverbal -er suffixation: Towards a descriptive position 99

0. Introduction 99
1. -er nominalizations: Agent names or Subject names? 101
1.1. Agentivity and salience 102
1.1.1. -er nominalizations as natural symbolic units 104
1.1.2. -er suffixation as a complex conceptual category 106
1.1.3. The verbal base of deverbal -er nominals 108
1.2. Non-agentives as external arguments 110
1.2.1. -er nominals profiling oblique participants 115
1.2.2. -er nominals based on unaccusatives 116
1.2.3. Middle-based -er nominals 117
1.3. -er nominalizations as Subject names 118
2. Lexicalization versus ad hoc nominalization 120
3. Towards a coherent account of deverbal -er nominalizations 123

Chapter 6: The middle construction 125
1. Middle formation: A state of the art 126
2. The representational versatility of the middle formation 128
3. Towards a semantic typology of middle constructions 132
4. Middle constructions and modality 137
4.1. The modality of ‘letting’ 140
4.2. The middle as ‘letting’ construction 143
5. Conclusion 147

Chapter 7: A multifunctional approach to -er nominalization 149
0. Introduction 149
1. Representational semantics 151
1.1. Agentive -er nominalization 152
1.2. Non-agentive -er nominalization 153
2. A semantic typology of non-agentive -er nominalizations 154
3. The constructional properties of -er nominalization 158
3.1. Lexicalized -er nominalizations 159
3.1.1. Non-agentive -er nominalizations 159
3.1.2. Agentive -er nominalizations 161
3.1.3. A note on instrumental -er nominalization 163
3.2. Ad hoc nominalizations 165
3.2.1. Phoric ad hoc nominalizations 166
3.2.2. Non-phoric ad hoc nominalizations 168
3.2.3. Ad hoc -er nominalization: Conclusion 172
3.3. The constructional properties of -er nominalizations: Summary 173
4. Deverbal -er suffixation as Subject-profiling 174
5. Conclusion 176
