What follows is a revised version of my doctoral thesis presented to St. Mary’s College/School of Divinity of the University of St. Andrews. I dedicate this work to my wife, Amber. Without her sacrifice and support, I could never have pursued my dreams. Words could not even begin to express my gratitude and my love.

My deepest appreciation is also extended to the many family members and friends who supported my studies. While it would be impossible to list everyone by name, I would especially like to thank my parents, Dr. Don and June Wilhite, to honor the memory of Garry Betty, and to extend my gratitude to the people of Calvary Baptist Church in Columbus, Georgia.

Mention must especially be made of Prof. Mario I. Aguilar, founding director of the Center for the Study of Politics and Religion, and the best doctoral supervisor a person could ask for. I thank him for is his wealth of wisdom and sound guidance. Additionally, credit is due to the many people who at various stages have read this work either in whole or in part and have offered invaluable insights: Dr. Mark Elliot, Prof. Harry Hine, Dr. Louise Lawrence, Prof. Karla F.L. Pollmann, and Prof. Gregory Woolf.

I completed my thesis, and then later revised it for this publication, while serving as a visiting instructor at Seattle Pacific University. The faculty of the School of Theology, and especially the three associate deans, Prof. Robert R. Drovdahl, Prof. Richard Steele, and Prof. Robert W. Wall, went above and beyond the call of duty in their generous support of me. I also wish to thank my TA, Angela Garland, who formatted the final copy.

Were it not for all of the people referenced in these acknowledgements, this project would certainly never have come to fruition. Any shortcomings in this work, however, are entirely my own.
