Acknowledgments

This book is a revised version of my 2020 doctoral dissertation at Bar-Ilan University. I owe a sincere debt of gratitude to Nili Samet, my doctoral advisor at Bar-Ilan University. This project could not have come to fruition without her expertise and encouragement. Her advice and generosity have been crucial to my work and my development as a scholar. To my professors in the Department of Bible at Bar-Ilan University, I owe my thanks for their teaching and guidance: Edward Greenstein, Yosef Ofer, Elie Assis, Michael Avioz, Jonathan Grossman, and Lior Gotlieb.

My thinking on Textual Criticism of the Hebrew Bible has been profoundly shaped by the Hebrew University of Jerusalem tradition, where I currently research. I consider myself fortunate to have Emanuel Tov as my additional doctoral advisor, who has dedicated endless time and effort to me and my work, sparing no effort to ensure its quality. As a Postdoc at the Hebrew University, I am fortunate to work on the Hebrew University Bible Project with Michael Segal, Shraga Assif, Cynthia Edenburg, and Shira Golani. Reading and editing biblical text in a collegial environment improved my work and skills as a text-critique scholar. I am especially grateful to Michael Segal for his mentoring and support. Additional professors have been generous in their willingness to support and engage with my work, offering feedback, conversations, and guidance: Noam Mizrahi, Roni Goldstein, and Menahem Kister.

Parts of this book were written during my stay at the University of Oxford as a Postdoc. I had the good fortune of working with Hindy Najman, who has been an extraordinary teacher and mentor. Her view of the fields of the Hebrew Bible and Ancient Judaism reshaped my thinking and is a continuous source of inspiration for my research. I am deeply grateful for her support, guidance, mentorship, and conversation. At the Oriel Centre for the Study of the Bible and the Oxford Centre for Hebrew and Jewish Studies, I have profoundly enjoyed the many conversations with scholars, colleagues, and friends. I am thankful for all I have learned there and the friendships forged.

During a global pandemic, I had the privilege to attend an online course on Samaritan Hebrew with Stefan Schorch at Martin Luther University Halle-Wittenberg. This course profoundly improved the present work. Many further conversations with Stefan shaped my thinking on the Samaritan Pentateuch. He graciously invited me to publish my research in the Studia Samaritana series. I would like to express my deep appreciation for his support and generosity.

I am grateful to teachers, colleagues, and friends who improved this book by reading specific chapters or discussing related issues: Shraga Assif, Jonathan

https://doi.org/10.1515/9783110981254-202
Ben-Dov, Reinhard Kratz, Anat Mendel Geberovich, Haggai Misgav, Harald Samuel, Michael Segal, and Eibert Tigchelaar.

My sincere thanks also go to many colleagues and friends who contributed to this project in various ways, ranging from offering direct feedback to supporting and encouraging my work more generally: Arjan Bakker, Tova Ganzel, Shira Golani, Yoav Hamdani, Renana Kedar, Yael Nezer, and Barak Sober.

While writing the dissertation, I was supported by Bar-Ilan Presidential Scholarship for Doctoral Students. In addition, the production of the book was enabled by generous grants from the World Union of Jewish Studies and the Memorial Foundation for Jewish Studies. I would like to express my gratitude to all these bodies for their assistance. Special thanks to the Riklis Prize for Outstanding Dissertation in Jewish Studies committee for awarding my dissertation with this prize.

My linguistic editor, Liat Keren, did an outstanding job improving my English, and Einat Tamir improved the images in the book. I am grateful to both. I also want to express my gratitude to de Gruyter for their incredible work and assistance, especially Alice Meroz and Teodor Borsa.

Last but not least, I want to thank my family, particularly my husband, Yoni. Without his friendship and support, this project could not have been completed. I dedicate this book to him with love.