Contents

Acknowledgement 7

Introduction by Dr. Mohammed Hatta 11

Part I. Indonesia’s foreign policy until the implementation of guided democracy

1. The basic principles of Indonesia’s foreign policy 15
2. Indonesia’s foreign relations before the transfer of power on December 27, 1949 29
3. Indonesian-Dutch relations after the transfer of power and the impact of the West Irian (West New Guinea) dispute on the relations between the two countries 79
4. The last Dutch-Indonesian negotiations toward a peaceful settlement of the West Irian dispute 109
5. Indonesia between two power blocs 178
6. Indonesia in relation with its neighbors and other Asian countries 193
7. The transition and the decline of constitutional democracy in Indonesia toward guided democracy and personal rule 248

Part II. Indonesia’s foreign policy since the implementation of guided democracy, the ascendancy of Soekarno to absolute power, and the return to the 1945 constitution

8. The end of the transition period and the reenactment of the 1945 constitution 271
9. The beginning of Soekarno’s active and militant foreign policy: The confrontation with the Dutch to solve the West Irian problem 282
Contents

10. The West Irian issue and its solution under guided democracy 288

11. Indonesia and the nonaligned world: The shift from nonalignment to a foreign policy of confrontation 313

12. Indonesia's role in the Second Nonaligned Conference at Cairo 343

13. Decline of the influence of the nonaligned group and the creeping dissension among the nonaligned countries 356

14. The frustrations and limitations of American diplomacy in Indonesia 367

15. Indonesian-Chinese relations during the Soekarno regime 408

16. The Indonesian confrontation with Malaysia 444

17. Indonesian-Indian relations in connection with the waning significance of Asian-African solidarity 507

Epilogue 542

Appendices 544

List of bibliographical abbreviations 625

References and bibliography 626

Index 635