ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

The present work is the outcome of my efforts over several years. I had to encounter a great number of difficulties and odds during the course of my research work. Therefore, it is with a sense of great personal gratification that I have completed it. But it would have been impossible for me to accomplish it, had there not been constant and sincere help and encouragement from quite a few people who also shared with me my moments of anxiety.

First of all I would like to mention Prof. Dr. Hans-Christoph Schmitt of Erlangen University, who spent much time on this work. With my sincere gratitude I dedicate this work to him.

I have had the opportunity to enjoy the scientific guidance of Prof. Dr. Peter Waldmann of Augsburg University and Prof. Dr. Bert Fragner of Bamberg University. They have been sources of constant help and encouragement.

The help and cooperation of some of my friends have been of crucial importance in completing this work. I especially would like to mention Mr. Anthony Hornby of Augsburg University who took the trouble of going through all the work and patiently improving the language.

I have been helped in various ways by many other friends to all of whom I am very much indebted. Among them I would only like to mention Markus Ohlenroth, Regina Zitzelberger and Christine Baier.

My final thanks are also due to Isabel Haensch, Zohreh and Farivar Hamzeh’ee, Morteza Najafi and Mohsen Bahrami.
M. Reza (Fariborz) Hamzeh'ee was born in Harsin, a small Kurdish town in Western Iran. He finished his Primary school in Kermanshah, and secondary school in Tehran, where he also did his two-year military service. His fascination for India took him to that country where he lived for many years studying. Since 1981 he has been living in Germany doing research in sociology.
