DE GRUYTER

Peace Economics, Peace Science and Public Policy (PEPS) was founded in 1997 by Walter Isard, Professor Emeritus of Economics and Regional Science at Cornell University, and widely recognized as a founding father of Peace Science.

The main objectives of Peace Economics, Peace Science and Public Policy are:

1. to further research in Peace Science and Peace Economics;
2. to expose the scholarly community to innovative peace-related research;
3. to disseminate the study of peace economics to a wider audience

PEPS accepts both theoretical and empirical contributions to the fields of Peace Economics and Peace Science. In line with Peace Science tradition, PEPS welcomes contributions from an interdisciplinary community of scholars from a variety of disciplines including economics, political science, regional science, mathematics, and history, among others.

PEPS publishes both full-length papers and shorter 'letters.' All content is peer-reviewed, and the journal is committed to providing a final decision on submissions within two months from initial submission“
