Acknowledgments

Many persons and organizations have assisted this study. Foremost is the chairman of the Commission on Race and Housing, Earl B. Schwulst, whose constant encouragement and deep conviction of the importance of the work enabled the research director to survive the hazards and frustrations inevitable in a large and complex research project. To the members of the Commission, whose names are listed elsewhere, I am indebted for their support, their patience through a lengthy process of research, and their constructive critical judgment on the plans and the results of the study.

Members of the Commission's Research Advisory Committee—Gordon W. Allport, Stuart W. Cook, Robert K. Merton, R. Stewart Rauch, and Robert C. Weaver, in addition to Mr. Schwulst—gave invaluable advice and criticism about the scope of the study, the methods of investigation, and the analysis and interpretation of the data. The late Charles S. Johnson exercised a large influence on the initial organization of the research. His untimely death deprived the study of a major source of inspiration and guidance. Also among the intellectual mentors of the study is Professor Herbert Blumer. Although not formally associated with the project, the influence of his ideas will be apparent to all acquainted with his work in the field of race relations.

It is hardly necessary to say that without the generous financial support of the Fund for the Republic, this study could not have been undertaken nor carried to completion. Beyond the financial, the officers of the Fund have greatly helped by their encouragement and continuous interest in the progress of the work. In the early stages, Frank S. Loescher, Fund consultant on minority group relations, made valuable suggestions on planning the project and assisted the research director in selecting collaborators and staff.

The present volume is largely based upon a series of related studies prepared by cooperating social scientists and other experts. Philip M. Hauser and Otis Dudley Duncan (Population Research and Training Center, University of Chicago) did the basic work on population trends and outlook. Collaborating in housing market studies were Chester Rapkin and William G. Grigsby (Institute for Urban Studies, University of Pennsylvania), Luigi Laurenti (University of California, Berkeley), William Goldner (University of California, Berkeley), Fred E. Case and S. Lynn Clark (Real Estate Research Program, University of California, Los Angeles), and James H. Kirk (Loyola University of Los Angeles). Field surveys of housing industry practices were carried out by Nicholas J. Demerath (Washington University), Rose Helper (University of Chicago), Floyd K. Hunter (University of North Carolina), R. Clay Sprowls (University of California, Los Angeles), Robert H. Sollen (California newspaper editor), and William Goldner.

Local studies of minority group housing conditions in selected cities were conducted by Hylan Lewis (Atlanta University), Robert A. Thompson (Atlanta Urban League), Jack E. Dodson (University of Texas), Morris Eagle (New York University), Harry H. L. Kitano (University of California, Los Angeles), Albert J. Mayer (Wayne State University), Forrest E. LaViolette (Tulane University), Giles Hubert and Joseph T. Taylor (Dillard University), Elizabeth L. Virrick (University of Miami), and R. Clay Sprowls, Nathan Glazer (Smith College) edited a collection of these studies for publication.

Studies of interracial housing and neighborhoods were made by Eunice and George Grier (Commission staff) and Henry G. Stetler (Connecticut State Commission on Civil Rights). Preston Valien and Jitsuichi Masuoka (Fisk University) prepared a research memorandum on social and economic consequences of residential segregation. E. Franklin Edwards and Harry J. Walker (Howard University) investigated the effects of urban renewal on Negro housing conditions. Margaret G. Reid (University of Chicago) contributed an analysis of color differentials in housing-income relationships.

Research memoranda on sociopsychological aspects of housing and minority groups, including racial attitudes, were prepared by Helen E. Amerman (Commission staff) and Stuart W. Cook and Claire Selltiz (New York University). Miss Selltiz also collaborated in the study of federal housing policies and programs affecting minority groups. Milton Nason of the Commission staff, and member of the California Bar, gave major assistance in legal analysis and the study of housing industry practices.

Several of the reports of research collaborators, in addition to being utilized in the present volume and in the Report of the Commission on Race and Housing, are published separately. Those unpublished are substantially reflected, as to their principal findings, in the present work. A complete list of the studies made for the Commission on Race and Housing, and their respective authors, is included in the bibliography at the end of this volume.

Serving on the staff of the Commission, in addition to those already mentioned, were Martin B. Loeb, consultant; Robert W. Campbell, Diana Clarkson, Bob Daniels, and Stanton Jue, research assistants; Dorothy Hassin, Lois Ness, Hanna Pitkin, and Jessie Omura Yasaki, statistical clerks; Betty Aycrigg, secretary. Maps and charts were prepared by Katherine C. Eardley, Chad W. Michel, and Rochelle Myers.

Much of the data for the present study came from governmental sources. For essential information and expert advice, I am obligated to the federal housing agencies, especially to their staff members Robert B. Pitts, George Snowden, Booker T. McGraw, Clarence R. Johnson, George B. Nesbitt, Paul F. Coe, and Flora Y. Hatcher; the U. S. Bureau of the Census, especially the chief of the Housing Division, Wayne F. Daugherty; the New York

State Commission Against Discrimination, particularly Edward Rutledge, head of the Housing Division; the New York City Commission on Intergroup Relations, especially its executive director, Frank S. Horne and assistant director, Corienne R. Morrow; the Philadelphia Commission on Human Relations, the New York City Planning Commission, and the Migration Division of the Department of Labor, Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

Private organizations that have assisted the study in important ways are the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, in particular its special assistant for housing, Madison S. Jones, and Constance Baker Motley, assistant counsel for the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund; the National Urban League, especially its housing secretary, Reginald A. Johnson; the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing, the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials, the National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials, the American Friends Service Committee, the Southern Regional Council, the Race Relations Department of the American Missionary Association, the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, the Hyde Park-Kenwood Community Conference, the American Council To Improve Our Neighborhoods, and the Mortgage Bankers Association.

A final word of appreciation and commendation is reserved for the Commission's able and devoted editorial assistant, June E. Harvey. To her belongs much of the credit for transforming a welter of manuscripts into an ordered series of publications. She directed the typing of manuscripts, assisted in editing them for publication, prepared the indexes, and corrected the proofs. In addition, the bibliography in the present volume is her work. These exacting and vital tasks she performed according to a high standard of excellence, with rare ability to organize masses of detail while holding in view the larger purposes.

It is evident that I have had a great deal of help in the research entering into this volume—more, undoubtedly, than I have known how to use most effectively. For all the help received, I am profoundly grateful. Responsibility, however, is not shared. The Commission on Race and Housing and the Fund for the Republic, while supporting and assisting the research to a maximum extent, have at all times accorded me as research director and my collaborators complete freedom to conduct the study and present the findings according to our own best judgment. This book, in particular, represents my judgment concerning the significant facts and conclusions that emerge from a large body of research. Consequently, for the contents of this volume, and its shortcomings, I am solely responsible.
