Acknowledgments

Although I remain responsible for the interpretation of the three movements described in this book, I want to acknowledge the creative work of my two principal research assistants on this project, Brenda Brasher and Paul Kennedy, who spent two years interviewing pastors and congregations as well as writing detailed field notes. Michael McKenzie also worked with me for two summers as a research assistant.

I am also deeply indebted to the hundreds of people who graciously consented to be interviewed, including senior leaders in these movements such as Chuck Smith, Oden Fong, Greg Laurie, Bil Gollatin, John Wimber, Carl Tuttle, Kevin Springer, Kenn Gulliksen, Ralph Moore, and Zac Nazarian. I could not have expected fuller cooperation, and I will always remain grateful for the education that I received in my interaction with the members and pastors of Calvary Chapel, Vineyard Christian Fellowship, and Hope Chapel.

I received extraordinarily valuable criticism on an earlier draft of this manuscript, and I wish to acknowledge the insights and criticisms of Dean Hoge, Roger Finke, and James Wind. The person most responsible for shaping this manuscript, however, has been my ever-cheerful editor at the University of California Press, Doug Abrams Arava.

Finally, this research would not have been possible without a grant from the Lilly Endowment. I appreciate the ongoing encouragement that I have received from both Craig Dykstra and James Lewis.
