Acknowledgments

KAREN L. ISHIZUKA AND PATRICIA R. ZIMMERMANN

Many generous hands and minds work together within the covers of this book. Our mining of home movies across ethnicities, nations, races, genders, disciplines, ranks, professional affiliations, and communities continually affirms the necessity of a collaborative historical ethics to produce shared meanings. This collaborative work has taught us that film history is always a dialogical juxtaposition of images, discourses, people, and practices.

We thank our contributors, an international brigade of home movie partisans. They invented new creative and scholarly approaches to home movies during the journey of this book's creation. They graciously accepted our long delays during several deaths in our families: those of each of our fathers, George T. Ishizuka and Byron L. Zimmermann, and Karen's brother, Kirk T. Ishizuka. We especially honor Maryann Gomes, the visionary curator from the North West Film Archive in Manchester, England, who passed away shortly after writing her essay for this anthology.

Eric Smoodin was our first editor at the University of California Press. Without his vision, Mining the Home Movie never would have materialized. We are indebted to his moxie. Mary Francis, another editor at the Press, adopted this project in its final stages with patience, astuteness, and equanimity.

Our research assistants Alice Hom, Grace An, and Liz Czach functioned as home movie angels, marshaling all details. Alice rode herd on the contributors' revisions. Grace translated from French into English and gathered biographies. Elizabeth developed the filmography/videography and bibliography. Mayumi Kodani provided invaluable assistance with the illustrations and visual material. For their labor and for their friendship, we thank Rachel Knowles, Jenny Jediny, Kole Ade Odutola, Jerome Ng, Marc Lesser, Rachel Lewitt, Ashley Ferro-Murray, and Loni Shibuyama, our undergraduate and graduate research assistants.

We also were blessed with a coterie of academic friends who cajoled us to have more intellectual courage. Through calls, e-mails, and food, Robert Dawidoff, John Kuo Wei Tchen, Stephan Gong, Gina Marchetti, Zillah Eisenstein, David E. James, Tim Murray, Amy Villarejo, Ruth Bradley, Scott MacDonald, John Hess, Anna Siomopoulos, Dale Hudson, Lisa Patti, Paula Rabinowitz, Laura Marks, and Tom Shevory became part of this project.

In the archival film realm, Steven Davidson, Stephen Gong, John Homiak, Jan-Christopher Horak, Eddie Richmond, Milt Shefter, Karan Sheldon, Dwight Swanson, Eric Schwartz, and Pamela Wintle shared their vast knowledge of amateur film to keep this book honest and useful. They all insisted that amateur film acquisition, preservation, and access require the most rigorous thinking and action.

A wide and generous variety of research grants from Ithaca College brought this massive project to fruition. We thank former Provost James Malek, current Provost Peter Bardaglio, and Associate Provost Garry Brodhead for their intellectual and financial support.

We also thank colleagues at Ithaca College and the Japanese American National Museum: Robert Dirig, John Esaki, Sandra Herndon, Karin Higa, James Hirabayashi, Lloyd Inui, Akemi Kikumura-Yano, Masaki Miyagawa, Roger Richardson, Tanya Saunders, Traevena Byrd, and Simon Tarr.

The Japanese American National Museum and Ithaca College provided important and sustaining institutional support. The Moving Image (the journal of the Association of Moving Image Archivists), the Small Gauge Task Force of the Association of Moving Image Archivists, the National Film Preservation Board, the National Film Preservation Foundation, and the Visible Evidence Conferences on Documentary created a vibrant, passionate community for many explosive yet productive polemics about the relationship between representation and history. Since 1993, these conferences have taken place in a variety of locations, such as Durham, North Carolina; Chicago; Los Angeles; Montreal, Canada; Bristol, England; Marseilles, France; and São Paulo, Brazil.

We also honor our families, who helped to get this book out simply by living with us. Karen thanks Robert A. Nakamura, her partner in life and work, for his insistence and ability to make everything even better; her children and best friends, Thai Binh and Tadashi, for laughs, love, and raison d'être; and her mother, Mary Ishizuka, for proving that love is stronger than death. Patty thanks her partner, Stewart Auyash, for love, sustenance, and inspiration; her son, Sean, for exuberance, spirit, and urgency; and her mother, Alice Zimmermann, for her home movies, shot in Chicago and across the United States.

We also thank each other for the gifts of collaboration. On the East and West Coasts, from different cinematic milieus, and from different ethnic heritages, we learned concretely that no good work happens alone. The world of home movies is simply too sprawling and too teeming with life and loss for solitary excavations. We formed a home movie workers' union, looking out for and pushing each other on when the work felt too complex and gargantuan. These solidarities helped us through transitions with our children and spouses, the deaths of our fathers, the devastations of September 11, and the horrific prospect of infinite war.

Finally, we thank the home moviemakers and their subjects from all over the globe for allowing us to move their work from private memory to public history. Each home movie image holds glistening fragments of the past. Each home movie contains specters of the dead, smiling ghosts inviting us into the image and its imagined world. Yet these home movie images are not phantoms. They live among us, pressing us to montage together the past, the present, and the future to bear witness. These home movies ask us all to embrace an alliance of people, histories, memories, and images that produces a continually unfolding commons, a dream against amnesia.
