

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

During the thirty years over which this book has been researched, I have gathered a small army of people to whom I am indebted. During recent fieldwork, priests, bishops, and social activists generously shared experiences and insights. I would rather not present a limited list, but I cannot resist the impulse to name some of the many who have opened their lives to my enquiry, including Fr. Xavier Arulraj; Fr. Arulselvam; Fr. Joe Arun, SJ; Fr. Jabamalairaja Irudayaraj, SJ; Fr. L. Yesumarian, SJ; Fr. S. Jeyapathi, SJ; Fr. Prakash Louis, SJ; Fr. Aphonse Manickam, SJ; Fr. Mark Stephen, SJ; Dr. Mary John; Fr. Michaelraj, SJ; Rev. Jeyakaram; Fr. Anthony Raj, SJ; Fr. Vincent; Fr. Francis Xavier, SJ; and especially Fr. Anthony Packianathan and Fr. A. Selvaraj, SJ. I was warmly received and hosted by many Jesuit houses and centers, including the Jesuit Archives at Shembaganur by Fr. Edward Jeganathan, SJ. Among my older debts to members of the clergy, I must mention Fr. S. Ponnad, SJ, who awakened my interest in rural Ramnad; Fr. Arulanandar, parish priest of “Alapuram” in the 1980s; and Fr. Aloysius Irudayam, SJ, who first directed me to that village.

Some part of this work began long ago with doctoral research supervised by N.J. Allen at Oxford University’s Institute of Social Anthropology. When trying to organize fieldwork in Bangalore, Dick and Molly Taylor offered a steady-hand and Charles Ryerson gave useful pointers. While I was in Madurai, Dr. J. C. B. Abraham, V. P. Sundaram, Eleanor Jackson, and the Gorringe family offered care, Dr. K. Paramamsivan taught me Tamil, and Jane and Jyoti Sahi were always there for me. In Alapuram village my greatest and enduring debt is to Mr. M. Sivan, village resident, research assistant, and good friend over many years, as well as to his wife, Sandanamma, and daughter, Revathi, who have offered me a home and family in the village. I am immeasurably grateful to all those in Alapuram who have been willing to be enrolled onto my research project in large or small ways.

Among the many who have accompanied me on this particular intellectual journey, I would like to thank Susan Bayly, Tony Good, John Harriss, Robert Frykenberg, Chris Fuller, Pamela Price, and Jock Sirrat, who lent support over many years, and S. Anandhi, Hugo Gorringer, Rajan Krishnan, and M.S.S. Pandian, who have done so more recently. I thank Ines Županov and Caroline Osella for reading the manuscript and for editorial suggestions, and Paolo Aranha for advising with expert historical interpretations. I am grateful to my colleagues and students at SOAS for their encouragement during the book's preparation, and to Giulia Battaglia, who worked on the bibliography. My intellectual debt to the many whose work I admire and learn from is contained in the list of references.

I would like to thank CISRS (Christian Institute for the Study of Religion and Society), IDEAS (Institute of Development Education, Action and Study, Madurai), IDCR (Institute of Dialogue with Cultures and Religions, Loyola College, Chennai), and MIDS (Madras Institute for Development Studies, Chennai) for institutional affiliation at various times. This project has benefitted from various research grants that have given me time to work on it, including doctoral research funding from the Social Science Research Council (1981–84), a grant from the Leverhulme Trust Research Fellowship (2004–5), from the Arts and Humanities Research Council (AHRC)/Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) in 2008–9 (grant no. AH/F007523/1 titled “Religion, Development and the Rights of Subordinated People”); and an ongoing ESRC grant in 2009–2011 (no. RES-062–23–2227, titled “Caste Out of Development”).

Some chapters draw on material published in preliminary form elsewhere. Chapter 2 uses “Catholic Saints and the Hindu Village Pantheon,” Man 28, no. 2 (1994); and “Possession and Confession: Affliction and Sacred Power in Colonial and Contemporary Catholic South India,” in The Anthropology of Christianity, edited by Fenella Cannell (Duke University Press, 2006). Chapter 3 draws on “South Indian Christians, Purity/Impurity, and the Caste System: Death Ritual in a Tamil Roman Catholic Community,” Journal of the Royal Anthropological Institute 2, no. 3 (1996). Chapter 4 draws on “Honour, Caste and Conflict: The Ethnohistory of a Catholic Festival in Rural Tamil Nadu (1730–1990),” in Altérité et identité: Islam et christianisme en Inde, edited by J. Assayag and Tarabout (Ecole des Hautes Etudes en Sciences Sociales, Paris, 1997). Chapter 5 borrows from “Idioms of Subordination and Styles of Protest among Christian and Hindu Harijan Castes in Tamil Nadu,” Contributions to Indian Sociology 28, no. 1 (1994), and chapter 6 from “Dalit Christian Activism in Contemporary Tamil Nadu,” in Ethnic Activism and Civil Society in South Asia, edited by David Gellner (Sage, 2009).

I would like to thank Joel Robbins for inviting my contribution to the University of California Press Anthropology of Christianity Series, anonymous reviewers for suggestions, and Reed Malcolm, my commissioning editor, for understanding and support. I am grateful to Carl Walesa for his meticulous copy-editing, to Pablo de Roulet for producing the maps, and to Oli Mosse, who improved the photographs.

With this book I remember my parents, Charles and Veronica Mosse; Julia, with whom I set out on this project what seems a lifetime ago, who shared in a youthful adventure, and who trusted that it would have meaning despite the ordeals; and my darling Jake who lives in my heart. Oli inspires me with his extraordinary courage and creativity, and Siobhan has woven love around the writing of this book and the North London home in which it finally took shape.
