Acknowledgments

This book could not have been written without the help of numerous individuals. First, I want to publicly thank my partner, Kenichi Haramoto, for providing me with love and nurture throughout this project. I also want to thank my parents, Tuck Hop and Dorothea Lee, who provided me with the discipline and skills I needed to write this book. Before my father passed away in December 2000, he told me a story that helped me complete this book project. When he was a young man, my father and one of his colleagues drafted seven chapters of what was supposed to be a nine-chapter book. They sent their chapters to an editor who was extremely negative about the project. Demoralized, they never finished the book. Later, the same editor who had been so critical of my father’s manuscript published something quite similar to what my father had submitted. My father’s story gave me the courage to complete this book project.

Second, I want to recognize and thank Bob Chang, Richard Delgado, and Jean Stefancic, who were instrumental in making this book possible. My friend Bob planted the seed for this project back in 1995, encouraging me to think about writing a book when I was still an untenured professor. After reading some of my written work, Richard and Jean suggested that I submit a book proposal to NYU Press. They then nourished the project from start to finish, providing me with helpful guidance all along the way, reading and commenting on numerous drafts.

This book started as an examination of race and discretion in the criminal justice system. In the summer of 1998, I decided to postpone that project and came up with the idea for the book which you are about to read. I began serious work on this book in 1999 and turned in a completed manuscript to the publisher three-and-a-half years later in July 2002. I am deeply grateful to Niko Pfund, the former director of NYU Press, for providing enthusiastic support for this book project in its various incarnations. I also greatly appreciate the editorial assistance I have received from Alison Waldenberg, editor, and Ginny Wiehardt, editorial assistant, NYU Press.

Third, I want to thank Angela Harris and Andrew Taslitz, the only two colleagues other than Richard and Jean who read the entire manuscript when it was in draft form and provided me with substantive feedback. I also thank my writing buddy, Carol Johnson, for reading and commenting on numerous chapters and providing me with moral support. Carol and I met weekly during the summer of 2000, exchanging rough drafts of our respective books-in-progress and providing each other with useful feedback.

I also want to commend and thank the two George Washington University law students who provided substantial and excellent research assistance on this book project: Zeena Abdi and Missy Grubbs. Zeena and Missy read numerous drafts of the manuscript in various stages of completion, and helped tremendously with research, cite-checking, editing, and proofreading. I want to thank my administrative assistants, Perla Bleisch from the University of San Diego School of Law and Glynis Hammond from the George Washington University School of Law, for providing me with excellent administrative support. I also thank my library liaison, Herb Somers with the Jacob Burns Law Library at the George Washington University School of Law, for truly outstanding research and library support.

I also want to thank the following individuals who read one or more chapters and provided me with helpful comments and suggestions for improvement: Laura Berend, Alafair Burke, Brian Cheu, Joe Colombo, Bob Fellmeth, Cynthia Ho, Jerry Kang, Orin Kerr, Susan Kuo, Carolyn Ramsey, Jeffrey Rosen, Jennifer Russell, and Leti Volpp. I also benefited from conversations with Dwight Aarons, Robin Ballagher, Paul Butler, Bill Bratton, Naomi Cahn, Burlette Carter, David Cruz, Angela Davis, Joshua Dressler, Flora Keshgegian, Mark Morodomi, Janice Nadler, Spencer Overton, Barbara Paige, Natsu Saito, Michael Selmi, Patricia Sun, and J. D. Trout about this book project.

I also benefited from the comments and feedback I received at numerous conferences at which I presented portions of this book when it was in progress. In particular, I thank Dorothy Brown, Alafair Burke, Burlette Carter, Lenese Hebert, Browne Lewis, Alfreda Robinson, and Larry Darnell Weeden for feedback at the 2002 Northeast People of Color Conference. I thank Laura Gomez, Chris Iijima, Ruth Jones, and Peter Kwan for feedback and comments at the 2001 Western Teachers of Color Conference. I thank Taunya Banks, Bob Chang, Neil Gotanda, Cynthia Ho, Jerry Kang, Susan Kuo, and Tayyab Mahmud for comments at the First Asian Pacific American Legal Scholarship Workshop in 1999. I thank Keith Harrison, Lenese Hebert, Ian Haney Lopez, Natsu Saito, Jonathan Stubbs, Eric Yamamoto, and Fred Yen for comments and feedback at the First National People of Color Conference in 1999. I also want to thank Catherine Brady and Mary Jane Moffitt for helpful feedback in the manuscript workshops at the 1999 Foothill Writers Conference.

Even before I began working on this particular book project in 1999, I started doing research on some of the subjects covered in Part II. Therefore, I want to thank the following University of San Diego students who provided research assistance before I started writing this particular book but who nonetheless contributed in some way to the final product: Kendie Chung, Denise Crines, Brian Derdowski, Kathryn Dove, Lise Forquer, David Kim, Natalie Maniaci, Phi Nguyen, Shannon O’Brien, and Xanath Owens. I also thank the following University of San Diego law students who provided research assistance on the actual book: Paul Baelly, Marc Baumgartner, Mike Cordrey, Nicole Davidson, Mo Park, Kelly Smith, Martha Waltz, and Charlotte Wilder. Finally, I want to thank the following George Washington University law students who provided additional research assistance on the book: Sonya Ahuja, David Berman, Megan Kinsey, Tree Martschink, Liza Meyers, Lori Ruk, and Keirston Woods.

Additional thanks go to Dean Michael Young of the George Washington University Law School for providing me with generous research stipends for work on this book. I also thank Dean Daniel Rodriguez, Associate Dean Virginia Shue, Former Dean Kristine Strachan, and Former Acting Dean Grant Morris of the University of San Diego School of Law, all of whom provided me with generous research stipends and time to work on this book project. I also thank Edna Mitchell, former Director of the Women’s Leadership Institute at Mills College for giving me a room of my own and board during the calendar year 1999, the year I began writing this book.
Finally, since I wrote most of this book in coffee shops, I want to thank Claire from Claire de Lune in San Diego, California, Dan and Bernie from Twiggs in San Diego, California, and the employees at Politics and Prose in Washington, D.C., for providing me with great nonfat no-foam lattes and a comfortable place to write. I apologize if I have forgotten anyone else who assisted me with this book project.
