Acknowledgments

This book is devoted to advocates for language rights, bilingual education and equity in schooling. The contents were developed based on dialogue and discussion with devoted scholars. Thank you especially to Terry Wiley, who has skillfully and carefully detailed histories of language policy and planning throughout his career. Thank you to Beatriz Arias, whose reminders and contributions have consistently positioned language as a civil right. I appreciate interest, feedback and support from Wayne Wright, with whom I initially shared thoughts about this manuscript at a rainy American Educational Research Association meeting in New York.

Early on in development, I am fortunate that Jim Lyons spoke with me and confirmed my research pursuits were in keeping with his knowledge and lived experience, having lobbied for the National Association for Bilingual Education and worked under the Carter and Reagan administrations to preserve the integrity of the original Bilingual Education Act. Norm Gold, associated with Californians Tomorrow and previously employed by the California State Department of Education, helped to clarify questions after I encountered Bob Cervantes’ publication documenting that a key basis for the 1978 Bilingual Education Act reauthorization changes, which constituted the first major shift away from bilingual education, ‘The AIR Report’ federal contract award was depraved and politically generated. David Rogers, of Dual Language Education of New Mexico, provided updates regarding its ongoing activities in the field, recommended the piece used for the book’s cover art and graciously committed time and efforts to ensuring agreement for its inclusion. Reynaldo Macías, founding chair of the UCLA César E. Chávez Department of Chicana and Chicano Studies, who worked for the National Institute of Education during time periods covered, provided astute thoughts regarding progress and questions, as I engaged in framing and thinking during revisions, particularly around defining infrastructure.

Throughout research, development, writing, editing and revisions, I regularly referred to the comprehensive Encyclopedia of Bilingual Education (2008), edited by renowned scholar Josué M. González. Its contents were instrumental and I thank especially Professor González, as well as its other contributors.

I appreciate time, patience and support from Multilingual Matters, especially Flo McClelland, Laura Longworth and Sarah Williams. Comments and observations from editors, both Wayne Wright and Nancy Hornberger, were valuable and reassuring.

I am thankful for colleagues at the University of Maryland College Park, in the College of Education and Division of Language, Literacy, and Social Inquiry and especially in our Applied Linguistics and Language Education faculty group, who instill intrinsic motivation and impart deep-seated professional and scholarly encouragement.

I am honored and grateful that Jade Leyva shared her art for this book’s cover. Originally commissioned by Dual Language Education of New Mexico for its 2019 La Cosecha Annual Conference, its addition is treasured.

Thank you to my parents, who helped with final copy edits, each of whom was a career civil servant and committed policymaker, and brother, whose well-wishes (especially amidst the pandemic) were critical.

Most of all, quips from my stalwart husband, as I struggled with revisions, helped me to push on. To our children, Kevin and Tyler, too fledgling to know the patience they’ve endured, especially in these past several months, thank you for your youthful reminder that there is a tomorrow and promising future.
