Acknowledgments

With the data for this book being gathered in language classrooms several years ago, and with these data being thought about and sifted over in the intervening years, it is inevitable that some of the data have been made public before now. However, these data have been removed from the context of the work in its entirety. The purpose of publishing this monograph is to give a broader perspective and clearer contextual framework for data which are perhaps difficult to consider in isolation from that context. Earlier versions of some parts of this book have been published elsewhere, and I would like to acknowledge those sources.

Earlier versions of many of the chapters were published in de Courcy (1995d). The data relating to the French immersion students in Chapter 4 were originally published in de Courcy (1995c). An earlier version of the section of Chapter 3 which relates to the Chinese learners was published in de Courcy (1997c). Some of the data on reading and writing in Chinese from Chapter 5, and the case studies of the learners of Chinese from Chapter 6 were originally published in de Courcy (1997d).

I would like to take this opportunity to thank those colleagues who attended the seminars and conference presentations where I discussed the work in progress on each of the areas investigated in the book, and gave me such valuable feedback. I would also like to thank those colleagues who commented on earlier written versions of the parts or whole of this book, especially Des Power, Sharon Lapkin, Mike Breen, Alastair Pennycook, Claudette Tardif, and the anonymous Multilingual Matters reviewers. Their constructive comments have been invaluable. My thanks also go to my husband, Phill, for his support and encouragement, and to my colleague, Paul Morris, for the photograph reproduced on the cover of this book.

My most particular thanks, however, must go to the teachers and students who let me into their classrooms and their lives to allow the data for this book to be collected.
