

Welcome Message from the Editor-in-Chief

We are presenting the first issue of Central European Journal of Chemistry (CEJC). I would like to greet the readers and authors. It seems appropriate to take this opportunity and say a few words about the reasons behind the launch of a new journal as well as our aims. Our focus is on publishing original results of authors from Central and Eastern Europe by which we mean the countries of the former communist block. We know that there is one science. There is no Russian, French or American chemistry. However, there are local inefficiencies in communicating research results to scientists worldwide, resulting from yesterday's political isolation or today's financial misery of science in Central and Eastern Europe. Our target is to assist authors by removing some of those inefficiencies.

Some people say that there are already too many scholarly journals. We believe, however, that there is always space for journals that better meet the needs of authors and readers than other journals. On one side, we want to bring them readers, by making our journal available at academic and research libraries worldwide, by promoting their papers to researchers in the same field, and by offering all the benefits of electronic publishing. On the other side, we want to help them in many aspects: we provide careful and transparent peer review, very fast publication, English language improvement, assistance in paper writing and technical editing etc. We also hope that researchers and academic libraries in the US, Western Europe and other countries can benefit from our service. Our aim isn't to publish a huge amount of average or poor contributions, in contrary, by strict but fair peer reviewing and language editing we want to provide quality content.

We are fully aware of the fact that establishing a viable scholarly journal takes time and effort. We cannot succeed without the understanding and support of key individuals and organizations. Many outstanding researchers have joined the editorial board of CEJC, their advice and assistance is gratefully acknowledged. Also editors and referees have made an indispensable contribution by reviewing and evaluating submissions.

Moscow, April 2003

Mikhail Antipin
Editor-in-Chief
Central European Journal of Chemistry