In writing and publishing a book, there are inevitably contributions from many people besides the author. This book could not even have been attempted without the generosity of the National Hockey League in granting me access to its previously unexamined archives. For this stroke of fortune, I wish to thank the NHL commissioner, Gary Bettman. Mr Brian O'Neill and Mr Darrin Burke in the Montreal office generously gave me their time and assistance, for which I am grateful. There are also other generous individuals who shared their research holdings with me. Mr Len Kotylo of the Society for International Hockey Research located and sent me the court cases involving E.J. Livingstone. Mr Birger Nordmark contributed the meeting minutes of the Ligue Internationale de Hockey sur Glace and articles dealing with the 1936 Winter Olympics hockey tournament. I am also indebted to the Hockey Hall of Fame for providing me with a copy of early NHL meeting minutes and to the staff of the National Archives of Canada, the Ontario Archives, and the Library of Congress for their assistance. Dr Michel Vigneault, arguably the foremost authority on early hockey history in Montreal, has consistently been generous with information and encouragement.

This work began as my doctoral dissertation at the University of Maryland. A special thanks must go to the members of my dissertation committee, Drs Keith Olson, Donald Steel, and Joan Hult, who provided valuable comments that improved the original work. I owe my intellectual development to two other members on the committee, Dr Nancy Struna, who was my advisor, and Dr Stephen Hardy. Steve, now at University of New Hampshire, had been my advisor in my masters studies at Robert Morris University and had inspired me to pursue my doctoral degree. Nancy has been a beacon in the vast ocean of learning. More often than I would like to admit, she has managed to refocus my attention to the forest when I have been staring at the trees. Any errors in this book, of course, are my responsibility.

I also want to thank the University of Toronto Press for taking on this project. I especially want to thank my editor, Len Husband, for his humour and patience with this neophyte in the publishing world. The editorial staff at the Press, in particular John St James, have made this book considerably more readable.

Lastly, I have to thank all my friends who have supported me over the years with their undying friendship. I cannot end these expressions of gratitude without a word for my love ones. My parents, my siblings, and their families were supportive all through graduate school and the writing of this book, even though such a journey can only be undertaken alone. To the One in my heart, this journey would not have occurred without you coming into my life. I dedicate this book to you.
