

Acknowledgments

This book exists because of the unwavering support and guidance that I received from many people during some seven years of research and writing.

The original research for the book was completed during my doctoral studies at Queen's University Faculty of Law. I am extremely grateful for all the support I received from the faculty and staff there, especially those who guided, reviewed, and commented on my work. I am particularly grateful to my PhD supervisor, Professor Allan Manson, for teaching me everything I know about prison law, as well as to my doctoral committee: Professors Sharry Aiken, David Freedman, and Fiona Kay. I am indebted to Professor Don Stuart for all the conversations we had that shaped my views of the law, as reflected in this book. I will never be able to thank Professor Anthony Doob of the University of Toronto enough for his contribution to this work – from teaching me how to conduct quantitative research to reading my work and providing valuable feedback every step of the way.

The writing of this book took place while I was a postdoctoral research fellow at Osgoode Hall Law School, York University. I am grateful for the support I received from the law school towards completing this work, and I am particularly thankful for the support and guidance I received from my postdoctoral supervisor, Professor Ben Berger.

I would also like to thank those who provided feedback on various drafts of the book and whose comments substantially improved this work: Professor Sheila Wildeman of Dalhousie University's Schulich School of Law, Basil Alexander, Tom Harrison, and the two anonymous reviewers.

This work would not have been possible without the generous support of the Social Science and Humanities Research Council, which funded my doctoral studies through an Armand Bombardier Award, my postdoctoral work through a Postdoctoral Fellowship, and the publication of this book through an Award for Scholarly Publications.

Thank you to the incredible team at the University of Toronto Press for all the hard work they put into this manuscript. I am particularly grateful for the fantastic guidance and support from my editor, Daniel Quinlan – one of the most patient people I know!

This book would also not have happened without the 197 incarcerated individuals who took significant risks in order to talk to me about their experiences, without any direct benefit to them. The book is dedicated to them and to everyone in their lives who have been touched by the devastating experience of incarceration. I am hoping that this book will contribute, even a little bit, to raising awareness of the injustices that take place behind prison walls and of the vulnerabilities that are being abused, and to perhaps helping improve the status quo. If any of that happens, it is entirely because of the 197 individuals who spoke to me.

I am also grateful to the prison officials and prison workers who have supported this study. Numerous men and women in the correctional systems work hard every day to help prisoners and to improve the system. While this book is a criticism of the system and some of the practices employed and perpetuated, it is not a reflection of everyone working in the system. I acknowledge and am grateful for the many compassionate and caring people who work with prisoners and who make the system a little better.

Thank you to my family for their love and support – my mom, my brother, my dad, and my partner, Jas.

Thank you especially to my mom, who taught me to fight for the vulnerable and who installed in me, from an early age, the belief that has guided all my professional life – that where there is a will, there is a way.

PUNISHED FOR AGING

