Historians (and journalists) are trained to bring stories and the past to life through words. Yet I find that words are insufficient to express my gratitude to the many brilliant and generous people who helped me publish this book. At the University of Toronto, I benefited enormously from the knowledge and encouragement of Doris Bergen. Her advice and insights have shaped this work and my academic trajectory more than I could ever express. I am also grateful for the time, support, and counsel that Lynne Viola and Jennifer Jenkins provided. Keir Waddington, James Ryan, Jasmine Kilburn-Toppin, and Bronach Kane made my time at Cardiff University fulfilling and productive, and I thank them for their support and their friendship. My experience at the University of Glasgow was equally important to the development of this project thanks to Mathilde von Bülow and Peter Jackson. I am especially grateful to Alex Marshall, who read several chapters of this manuscript and provided invaluable suggestions throughout the process. Thank you to Jamie Doherty for your friendship, humour, and unrivalled ability to turn a good phrase. At the Université de Montréal, I have had the pleasure of working with wonderful colleagues and friends who have listened, advised, and provided unwavering moral support. A special thank you to Susan Dalton, Laurence Monnais, Helen Dewar, David Merren, and Thomas Wien. You’ve helped make the Université de Montréal home.

Many dear friends and colleagues have enriched this project. Fabien Theofilakis has been a staunch cheerleader, a partner in several academic ventures, and a mentor and friend for many years. His feedback on the structure of the book solved several problems in one shot. Lilia Topouzova’s moral support and friendship have sustained me from the time we first met at the University of Toronto. Her scholarship and commitment to effect positive change through history and teaching are an inspiration. Erin Hochmann has been a constant source of counsel and friendship. Her suggestions related to the introduction of the book were invaluable. My deep gratitude to Julie Ault, Jennifer Lynn, Willeke Sandler, Lauren Stokes, and Kira Thurman, who read and commented on several chapters of this book. Your astute questions and perceptive insights were indispensable; your encouragement priceless. Throughout the process of researching and writing, I have benefited from the friendship and support of Rebecca Carter-Chand, Alex Reisenbichler, Tom Haakenson, Jacob Eder, and Colin Lang. Thank you to Anne Zetsche for your enthusiasm for the project and for making Berlin special.

My research was possible only through the generous assistance of many archivists and librarians. Thanks are due to the staff of the Bundesarchiv Berlin, Koblenz and Freiburg; the Archiv der Akademie der Künste, the Landesarchiv, the Deutsches Historisches Museum, the Staatsbibliothek, and the Archiv des Auswärtigen Amtes, in Berlin; the Institut für Zeitgeschichte in Munich; the Deutsches Literaturarchiv in Marbach; the Staatsarchiv Bremen; and the Staatsarchiv Ludwigsburg. Thanks also to the archivists at Yad Vashem, Israel; the Jagiellonian University Archives and the Biblioteka Jagiellońska, Kraków, Poland; the British National Archives, London; the Central State Archives, Ukraine; the Library of Congress and the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum, in Washington, DC.

Generous support for my research and writing came from the Berlin Program for Advanced German and European Studies at the Freie Universität, the Deutscher Akademischer Austauschdienst (DAAD), the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council, Canada (SSHRC), the Joint Initiative in German and European Studies (JIGES), and the history departments at the University of Toronto, the University of Glasgow, and the Université de Montréal. The suggestions and feedback I received at various conferences greatly improved this book. Thanks in particular to the Centre for Gender Studies, Glasgow, the American Historical Association, the German History Society, Uppsala University, the Universität Trier, the Freie Universität Berlin, the John F. Kennedy Institute for North American Studies, the Russian Academy of Sciences, and Women in German. I am grateful for the outstanding work of the team at the University of Toronto Press and, in particular, my brilliant editor Stephen Shapiro, whose feedback and direction made the publishing process a pleasure. I have been fortunate to work with incredible students at Cardiff University, the University of Glasgow, and the Université de Montréal. Their curiosity and thoughtful questions reinforced to me why the study of journalism is so important, past and present.
Thank you to my parents; my sister, Janell; and my in-laws, Joan, Tony, and Chris Barton. You believed in and supported me throughout the entire process, and I could not ask for a more caring family. Finally, my deepest, ongoing love and gratitude go to my late husband, Graham Barton. He encouraged me from the start, picked me up when I wanted to give up, made me laugh even at the worst of times, and inspired me with his strength, dignity, and kindness. Graham made me promise that I would finish what I started in the archives several years ago. I dedicate this book to him.
