ABSTRACT

The British Library contains the world's largest collection of extant Syriac manuscripts. Unfortunately, its principal catalog, William Wright's Catalogue of Syriac Manuscripts in the British Museum Acquired since the Year 1838, does not include a page index. This has resulted in great frustration and loss of research time for those who have consulted the British Library holdings. The "Wright Decoder" provides the index we all wish William Wright had himself written. It is organized by sequential shelfmarks and provides the volume and page numbers in Wright's catalog that corresponds to each Syriac manuscript.

With a collection of over a thousand Syriac manuscripts including the majority of those written in the first millennium, the British Library is the world's most important depository of original Syriac material. In the 1870s William Wright catalogued most of the British Library's Syriac holdings and his three volume Catalogue of Syriac Manuscripts in the British Museum Acquired since the Year 1838 remains an indispensable resource for all researchers of Syriac studies.¹ Wright carefully inventoried the content of the collection, provided basic codicological information for each manuscript, estimated the date of composition, and often pointed out juicy tidbits about the scribes who wrote these manuscripts—ranging from their often elaborately composed anathemas to complaints against biting flies, bad parchment, and no one reading the manuscripts they so laboriously had copied. Despite its numerous strengths and riches there remains, however, one lacuna in Wright's Catalogue that has irked generations of Syriac scholars. It does not have a page index.

Unlike his later catalog of the Cambridge University Library,² Wright's catalog of the British Museum's (later British Library's) collection does not proceed in order of shelfmark. Instead, he organized his Catalogue by genre (e.g. biblical manuscripts, hagiographies, scientific texts, etc.). As a result, the progression of the Catalogue's 1200 pages has no relationship with shelfmark. Adjacent shelfmarks may be separated by a thousand pages while manuscripts found sequentially in Wright's catalogue may have shelfmarks that differ by five thousand. To help the reader navigate through his Catalogue Wright included in the final volume a list of all the shelfmarks. Unfortunately, this master index does not provide page numbers, most likely because when Wright composed it he did not have the equivalent of modern day page proofs.

Instead Wright assigned a Roman numeral to each manuscript depending on where it appeared in his catalogue and he had his final index correlate this numeral with the shelf mark. So, for example, the first manuscript appearing in Wright's Catalogue (Egerton 704) was assigned the notation of "I," the second (Additional 14,671) "II" and so forth. These numerals, however, have no further descriptive function; one neither cites nor orders a Syriac manuscript using them. So what do you do if you want to look at manuscript Additional 17,178, for example? First you go to Wright's index and read that Additional 17,178 corresponds to DCCCXXVIII. But now what? There is no indication as to what volume or page this corresponds to in the Catalogue. If you are lucky enough to guess that this appears in the second volume, you then start flipping through the pages to zero in on where DCCCXXVIII lies. Alas, Wright's numbers do not appear on each page, but only as a header to a given manuscript. So, you may have to flip through a dozen pages to move from one Roman numeral to another. Alternatively, a given page might contain three or four numerals. Worse yet, what if your ability to memorize Roman numerals is a little off and you forget one of the C's. Only ten minutes later when you finally make it to the end of page 639 will you read in small print the actual shelfmark and discover your mistake (DCCXXVIII is Additional 14,610 not 17,178). You then have to go through over two hundred more pages before you end up on page 855 which is the proper place to find Additional 17,1798 (aka. DCCCXXVIII). Although simply inconvenient when looking for a single manuscript, this becomes quite frustrating when looking for multiple manuscripts.

The "Wright Decoder" is the index we all wish William Wright had himself written. Although not the sort of article you would wish to read from start to finish, this master index can save scholars countless hours if simply printed out and enclosed with one's own copy of Wright's Catalogue or if brought directly to the British Library. It is organized by sequential shelfmarks that immediately provide the Catalogue volume and page numbers corresponding to that manuscript. It also includes Wright's own numeration as well as his paleographic assessment of the manuscript's date. The hope is that this may be a time saving device for those scholars who consult Wright's Catalogue as well as those who have pleasure of working directly with the British Library collection.
