

CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION	3
------------------------	---

CHAPTER I

PEACE AS A WAR AIM DURING THE WORLD WAR

I. Definition and preliminary observations	6
Definition, 7; preliminary observations, 10.
II. Origins of the World War	14
III. Evolution of peace as a war aim	18
Early British war aims, 18; Sir Edward Grey and the United States, 22; President Wilson's crusade for a league of nations, 25; the position in Great Britain, 33; in France, 36; in Russia, 38; in Italy, 39; in Germany, Austria and Hungary, 39; the Papal appeal of August 1917, 41; political freedom as a condition of peace, 42.
IV. Factors influencing this evolution	45
A. Factors promoting this evolution, 45;
1. the general stress of the war, 45;
2. the influence of the United States, 46.
B. Factors opposing this evolution, 50;
1. national interests, 50;
2. distrust of Germany, 51;
3. fear of jeopardizing victory, 52;
4. political psychology, 56.
V. Conclusions	57

CHAPTER II

THE QUEST FOR PEACE AT THE PEACE CONFERENCE

I. The double task of the Peace Conference: the settlement of national claims and the establishment of an international order	60
II. Two examples of the settlement of national claims under international influence:	62
A. The Franco-German territorial settlement, 62;
The French territorial war aims, 63; Alsace-Lorraine, 70; the Saar, 71; the left bank of the Rhine, 77.

B.	The colonial settlement, 86; Colonies and the World War, 86; the chronology of the conquest, 87; the Fifth of the Fourteen Points, 92; the claims of the conquerors, 95; the solution, 97.
III.	The quest for an international order	99
A.	The general problem, 99; President Wilson and his European partners, 99; the Fourteen Points, 103; the three fundamental policies, 103.
B.	The pacific settlement of international disputes, 107; The Anglo-French initiative, 107; the Phillimore proposals, 108; the Bourgeois plan, 109; the House-Wilson proposals, 112; the solution, 114.
C.	The principle of collective security, 118; The Wilsonian idea of mutual guarantees, 118; the tragedy of Articles 10 and 19, 120; the British idea of sanctions, 124; the French idea of an international army, 127.
D.	Disarmament, 129; President Wilson's proposals, 129; the suggestions of General Smuts, 131; the platonic results, 131.
E.	Conclusion, 133.

CHAPTER III

TWENTY YEARS OF ARBITRATION

I.	The general situation	134
	The post-war atmosphere in Europe, 134; peace in Europe and the United States, 136.
II.	The Permanent Court of International Justice	137
	The establishment of the advisory Committee of Jurists, 137; their "draft scheme," 138; compulsory or optional jurisdiction, 142; the revision of the scheme by the Council, 146; the 1920 Assembly and the adoption of the Statute, 149; the subsequent history of the Court, 153.
III.	The ex-neutrals and arbitration	155
	The Scandinavian proposals of 1920 and their consequences, 155.
IV.	The Geneva Protocol of 1924	156
	Arbitration as a condition of security and disarmament, 156; the ideal and procedure of absolute and universal arbitration, 157; the Protocol repudiated by the British Government, 159.
V.	The Locarno Treaties of 1925	162
	The Protocol of 1924 and the Locarno Treaties of 1925, 162; Locarno and arbitration, 163.

CONTENTS

xvii

VI. The General Act for the peaceful settlement of international disputes of 1928	165
The pluralistic liberalism as opposed to monistic rigidity, 165; the effort and its result, 167.
VII. The Briand-Kellogg Pact of 1928	168
Its French origins, 168; its American character, 169; its terms and significance, 170; the Kellogg Pact and the League of Nations, 172.
VIII. The will and the way to peace	174
The judge and the policeman, 174; international legislation, 175; war and peaceful change, 176; the will more at fault than the means, 176.
IX. The Aaland Islands dispute	177
An example of peace maintained in spite of undeveloped pacific procedures, 177; the origins of the dispute, 178; a question of domestic jurisdiction?, 179; the Commission of Rapporteurs, 182; the limits of self-determination, 183; the solution, 187.
X. The Italo-Ethiopian dispute	188
The contrasts between 1920 and 1935, 188; some antecedents, 190; Italian will to conquer, 194; the Wal Wal incident, 196; the arbitration, 199; the Italian indictment, 202; the inevitable war, 204.
XI. Conclusion	205
The possibilities and limitations of unsanctioned arbitration, 205.

CHAPTER IV

THE FLUCTUATING DESTINIES OF COLLECTIVE SECURITY

I. Collective security and the United States	208
II. The destiny of Article 10	209
Its American origins, 209; the origins of Canadian hostility, 209; the resolution of the Second Assembly, 210; the Canadian amendment of 1922, 211; the debates of the Fourth Assembly, 214; the vote on the interpretative resolution, 219.
III. The whittling down of Article 16	219
The attempt to implement Article 16, 219; Lord Robert Cecil's optimistic "Notes on economic pressure," 222; the Scandinavian draft amendments of 1920, 224; the debates at the First Assembly, 225; the International Blockade Committee, 228; the debates at the Second Assembly, 230; four points of difference, 233; (1) the "state of war," 233; (2) the cooperation of "all Members of the League," 234; (3) the severance of all relations, 236; (4) the automatic character of sanctions, 237; the interpretative resolutions, 238; their devastating effect on collective security, 242.

IV.	The Treaty of Mutual Guarantee of 1923	243
	The original link between disarmament and collective security, 243; the Permanent Advisory Commission in 1920, 244; the position of France, 244; the Franco-British dialogue, 246; the Temporary Mixed Commission, 248; the Treaty of Mutual Guarantee, 249; its failure, 251.
V.	The Geneva Protocol of 1924	252
	The Franco-British political situation in 1924, 252; the Protocol essentially an instrument of collective security, 254; its success and failure, 259; the Protocol of 1924 and the Polish-British treaty of 1939, 260.
VI.	The Locarno Rhine Pact of 1925	261
	Locarno and the Protocol, 261; Sir Austen Chamberlain on British commitments, 263; Locarno and French security, 264.
VII.	The aftermath of Locarno	265
	The contagion of regionalism, 265; the model treaties of 1928, 268; the General Convention of 1930, 268; the disintegration of collective security, 270; miscellaneous other attempts to develop collective security, 272; the Finnish proposal of financial assistance to States victims of aggression, 272; the Convention on Financial Assistance of 1930, 274.
VIII.	Collective security as an historical fact	277
	The anatomy and the physiology of collective security, 277; the League of Nations and its failure to apply sanctions, 277; the reasons of this failure, 278.
IX.	The application of economic sanctions in the Italo-Ethiopian dispute	279
	The end of arbitration, 279; Great Britain and sanctions, 280; the philosophy of China, 283; the position of France, 284; the last attempt at conciliation by the Council, 285; the proclamation of Italian aggression, 286; the Assembly debate of October 9-11, 1935, 287; the three allies of Italy, 288; Switzerland, 290; France and Great Britain, 291; the U.S.S.R., 293; Latin America, 294; the half-heartedness of the operation, 297; the conquest of Ethiopia, 298; the Assembly is reconvened at the request of the Argentine Republic, 299; the Italian case as presented in Count Ciano's letter of June 29, 1936, 301; the speech of the Negus, 302; the views of the Argentine convener, 305; for and against the cessation of sanctions, 307; against, the

CONTENTS

xix

- Union of South Africa, 307; for, the U.S.S.R., 308; Latin America, 311; three British Dominions, 311; the European neutrals, 312; the United Kingdom, 314; France, 315; the Assembly resolutions and the confession of failure, 316.
- X. The final disintegration of collective security . . . 318
- The Geneva aftermath of the Italo-Ethiopian conflict, 318; the task of the special Committee on the application of the principles of the Covenant, 318; the Australian suggestion of April 20, 1936, 319; the Assembly of July 1936, 320; the position at the end of 1936: the ex-neutrals, 322; Latin-America, 323; the faithful, 324; the position in September 1938: the ex-neutrals' return to neutrality, 327; the backsliders, 329; the British attempt at compromise, 329; the remains of the sanctionist front, 330; the final confession of corporate impotence, 333.

CHAPTER V

THE TRAGEDY OF DISARMAMENT

- I. Introduction 335
- Arbitration, security, disarmament, 335; the struggle for disarmament, 337; the three periods in this struggle, 339.
- II. The Franco-British period, 1920-1926 340
- The Covenant and the Peace Treaties, 340; the creation of the Permanent Advisory Commission, 342; the first disarmament offensive by the Assembly of 1920, 345; the creation of the Temporary Mixed Commission, 352; the first political alignment, 353; disarmament and collective security, 353; the Washington Naval Conference, 355; the plan of Lord Esher, 356; the hopes of Locarno, 358.
- III. The preparations for the Disarmament Conference, 1926-1932 358
- The Assembly of 1925, 358; the establishment of the Preparatory Commission for the Disarmament Conference, 361; its task as defined in the so-called questionnaire, 363; its first meeting on May 18, 1926, 365; the general debate, 366; the first session, 373; the 1926 Assembly, 374; the second session of the Preparatory Commission, 376; the position at the end of 1926, 378; the third session of the Preparatory Commission, 380; its results, 386; the advent of the U.S.S.R. in November 1927, 389; the London Naval Conference of 1930, 391; the session of 1930, 392; its results, 395; the attitude of four groups of States, 396; the summoning of the Disarmament Conference, 403.
- IV. The Disarmament Conference 405
- Its importance and composition, 405; its principal phases, 407; the first phase, the "general discussion," 407; Sir John Simon defines the British position, 409; M. Tardieu and the French proposals, 412; Mr. Gibson and the United States, 415; Chancellor Brüning and the German rejoinder, 416; Mr. Dino Grandi's anti-French stand, 419; Japan, Manchuria and disarmament, 421; Mr. Litvinoff and his anti-militaristic philosophy, 422; the end of the "general discussion," 426; the "General Commission" and its technical committees, 427; President Hoover's proposals of June 1932, 428; the resolution of July 23, 1932, 429; the second phase, 432; the resolution of December 12, 1932, 433; the third phase, 434; the discussion of the French memorandum on disarmament and security, 434; the British proposal of January 30, 1933, 439; the fourth phase, Mr. MacDonald's speech of March 16, 1933, 441; the debate to which it gave rise, 447; the German reply, 450; an unanimous resolution, 453; the voice of America, 454; the resolution of June 8, 1933, 459; the meeting of the General Commission of June 29, 1933, 462; the reunion of October 1933, 466; the wire of Baron von Neurath, 469; the fifth and final phase, 469.

- V. The responsibilities for failure 470
 Disarmament and aggression, 470.

CHAPTER VI

A RETROSPECT AND A PROSPECT

- I. The dual purpose of this chapter 472
- II. Recapitulation 473
 Summary of chapter I, 473; the origin and development of organized peace as a war aim in the World War, 474; summary of chapter II, 476; justice and the peace settlement of 1919, 477; the purposes of the League of Nations, 481; summary of chapter III, 482; the Permanent Court of International Justice, 483; the legislator, the judge and the policeman, 485; summary of chapter IV, 486; collective security and the abstention of its American promoter, 486; collective security and the conquest of Ethiopia, 488; summary of chapter V, 490; national armaments and international insecurity, 490; the technical difficulties of disarmament, 492; the responsibility for its failure, 494.
- III. Why and whither 495
 Why was the quest for peace unsuccessful, 496; four types of peace, 497; the peace of the future, 499.

THE QUEST FOR PEACE

