Acknowledgements

All edited collections are works of collaboration, and this one is no different. We thank all of the contributors for their excellent chapters, their enthusiasm for a third edition of the book, their thoughtful engagement with our feedback and comments, and their speedy response to our queries. Many of the authors of this edition of Understanding global social policy are contributors to the previous two editions, while others have joined for this third round. All are highly appreciated colleagues, distinguished experts in their areas, and we have enjoyed working with them in the context of this third edition.

All the chapters have been thoroughly reviewed by ourselves, other authors, and external reviewers at different stages of the process. The book has benefited from the comments arising from the anonymised peer review process. We thank the authors for providing their comments on draft chapters by other contributors. As authors of Chapter 5, ‘Theorising global social policy’, we have greatly appreciated their supportive engagement with our ideas under development.

We would like to thank the copyright holders of chapter figures for permission to reproduce them. Should any have been overlooked, please contact us and we will rectify any errors at the earliest opportunity.

We are appreciative of The Open University’s School of Social Sciences and Global Studies Research Fund for financially supporting some of our work on this book.

The commissioning, editorial and production team at the Policy Press have, as ever, been a delight to work with. We thank Laura Vickers-Rendell, Emma Cook, Amelia Watts-Jones, Millie Prekop and Dawn Rushen for their timely support, delivered with clarity and purpose.

Since the publication of the second edition, one of our contributors, Bob Deacon, sadly passed away. A key figure in global social policy, his contributions to the field are sorely missed. At the same time, we are pleased to involve a younger generation of global social policy scholars to contribute to this edition, and to work with colleagues to author chapters who may not have previously identified with global social policy. Such ongoing dialogues have been very productive for us all and have helped to refresh, develop and expand this edition of the book.

We look forward to many cross-disciplinary, intergenerational and international dialogues continuing well into the future.
