Acknowledgements

There are many people who we wish to acknowledge and thank who helped us to make this book a reality; our authors, families, friends and colleagues whose personal and professional insights on mothering and non-mothering biographies proved invaluable in shaping this book.

We would like to thank colleagues at the Department of Education, University of Oxford, which was a lead organisation in implementation of one of the largest comparative qualitative biographical studies of mothers in ten European countries (part of the Inclusive Education and Social Support to Tackle Inequalities in Society [ISOTIS] project), and especially Professor Edward Melhuish and Professor Jacqueline Barnes; Professor Kathy Silva for her encouraging comments about the study and findings and of the panel presentations at Utrecht conference; colleagues at the Department’s Child Development and Learning group and the Department’s Qualitative Research Hub, and its convener Associate Professor Velda Elliott for providing a discussion platform for presenting methodology and findings from the ISOTIS biographical study. We would like to thank the organisers of the 2019 conference Equality and Inclusion (University of Utrecht) at which the results of the ISOTIS biographical study were presented at the panel discussion ‘Identities and discrimination: overcoming stigmatization of being disadvantaged in fragmented European societies’. We would like to say special thanks to colleagues in Research Network 03 of the European Sociological Association ‘Biographical Perspectives on European Societies’, and especially to Professor Maggie O’Neill for her invaluable friendly advice and for making time to discuss our biographical work at conferences and informally. We express our gratitude to Professor Kaja Kazmierska and her colleagues, who helped with the organisation of a panel discussion of the ISOTIS project at the Research Network 03 mid-term conference hosted by University of Łódź in 2018. We would like to thank Professor Robert Miller and Professor Fritz Schütze for their reflections and advice on the initial outcomes of the biographical study of mothers, presented at the conference in Łódź.

We would like to acknowledge the Sociological Association of Ireland for their support of biographical research; the Biographic Narrative and Lifecourse Research Network of the Sociological Association of Ireland for many dialogues with regard to the meanings of mothering and motherhood, agendas and innovations in biographical research. We would like to thank Dr Lorraine Green (Edge Hill University), Dr Tanja Kovačič (University of Galway), Dr Patricia Prieto Blanco (Lancaster University), Prof Anne Byrne (University of Galway) and Prof Gayle Letherby (University of Plymouth) for their cooperation, friendship and invaluable insights on biographic narrative.
interviewing. We are very grateful to our many colleagues and friends in the UK, the Republic of Ireland, Czechia and Austria.

We would like to thank our outstanding authors for sharing both scholarly interpretations of mothering and non-mothering and reflective personal experiences with us, and for the many conversations, dialogues and other communications that you have shared with us throughout this process that were so important to this book. We especially would like to acknowledge Dr Joan Cronin (University College Cork) for her collegiality and commitment to this book and for broadening the research agenda on non-mothering.

Our sincerest gratitude is due to Isobel Bainton, our Commissioning Editor at Bristol University Press, for her outstanding collegiality, support and generosity since the start of this scholarly collaboration. Our thanks to Jay Allan, Senior Assistant Editor at Bristol University Press, for their practical and constructive support of the book’s editorial team.

We are especially grateful for the love, care and encouragement of our families during this entire process, without whose support this book would not have come to fruition. Lyudmila especially thanks her husband Chris and their children Elizabeth and Stephen, who supported her work wholeheartedly and regularly offered a helping hand. Lisa especially wants to thank her parents Annette and Christy and her brother Chris for their unwavering support, encouragement and love. Kateřina thanks her colleagues and friends Jana Hořická, Antonín Kretek and Johannes Oberzaucher for joint thinking and creative endeavours without which she would not have been able to meet her commitments to this book.

We dedicate this book to our families and our mothers.

We would also like to dedicate this book to the women; mothers and non-mothers from Australia, Canada, Czechia, Germany, Iran, Ireland, Kenya, Poland and UK, who agreed to participate in individual studies and whose voices make this book such an important contribution to international research and policy. We acknowledge the many women whose life experiences are documented in this book, whose stories of mothering, motherhood and non-mothering in diverse circumstances have truly humbled us as researchers.

Last, but not least, we dedicate this book to everyone who engages in the constant chain of highly demanding yet extremely rewarding practices of care. Without you, the world as we know it would cease to exist.
