It is well known that academic books require a long gestation before being ready to be published. Indeed, many years have passed since 2018, when I first started toying with the idea of publishing an edited collection on the multifaceted and often contentious concept of prefigurative politics. This elongated process gave the contributors and especially me, the editor, the rare – at least in contemporary academia – opportunity to carefully ponder, chisel and cross-reference the various chapters of the book to form what, hopefully, stands as a strong, cohesive and illuminating volume. However, this requires patience. For this reason, I’d like to begin by thanking each and every contributor for bearing with my demanding editorial requests and the many delays. A special thanks also goes to Arturo Escobar and Davina Cooper who very generously agreed to frame the volume with two powerful and brilliant pieces.

I’m also very grateful to my commissioning editors at Bristol University Press, Shannon Kneis and Paul Stevens, who shared my excitement for the project and remained encouraging despite the challenges encountered along the way. Thanks also to Hannah Austin for her extremely professional editorial support in the creation of the first full manuscript, and to artist and illustrator Giacomo Trivellini for creating a unique and provocative piece of art for the cover.

Like many other book projects, this one reflects my personal intellectual journey. Landing a postdoc in the Faculty of Political and Social Sciences at Scuola Normale Superiore in Florence gave me the push and the determination to shift my research focus from the sociology of work and labour market policy to political participation and social movement studies – for which the department is world-renowned and towards which my ‘academic heart’ has always been drawn. These years have been punctuated by very fruitful encounters and collaborations; most notably, with Francesca Forno and Paolo Graziano around sustainable community movement organizations, which led to the organization of two extremely successful mini-conferences in Berkeley (2016) and Lyon (2017) for the annual gatherings of the Society for the Advancement of Socio-Economics (SASE).
This engagement with SASE was formalized the following year when, together with Torsten Geelan, Katherine Chen and Joyce Rothschild, we launched the Alternatives to Capitalism research network, which now constitutes a vibrant and ever-growing community. These conferences attracted a great number of scholars from around the world interested in the study of non-conventional forms of activism and political engagement able to challenge contemporary capitalism. Many of them are contributing authors in this edited volume. Others passionately shared their ideas and perspectives during paper presentations, panels and themed round tables.

In particular, during the 2019 gathering held at The New School for Social Research in New York, I had the opportunity to engage in some fascinating and extremely useful conversations on prefigurative politics with Luigi Pellizzoni, Alice Dal Gobbo, Audrey Laurin-Lamothe, Maura Benegiamo, Salvo Torre, Dario Minervini, Onofrio Romano, Laura Basu, Philipp Degens, Jonathan Preminger, Dario Azzellini, Marion Maignan, Susanne Giesecke, Jason Spicer, Marcelo Vieta, Michele Bianchi, Lampros Lamprinakis, Sophie Dubuisson-Quellier, David Bailey, Elizabeth Bennet, Malu Villela, Bernd Bonfert, Jan Blažek, Dirk Holemans and many others. So a heartfelt thanks goes to SASE and to the entire Alternatives to Capitalism community, which played a crucial role in inspiring me to pursue this book project and sparked broader interest in prefigurative politics.

I would also like to thank Christian Fuchs and the organizing committee of the European Sociological Conference held in Athens in 2017 for kindly inviting me to the semi-plenary session titled ‘(Un)Making Capitalism’. This was a wonderful opportunity to try out loud, in front of a large and specialized audience, some of my reflections on the disruptive potential of prefiguration, with my speech titled ‘Embodying the critique to capitalism’. These ideas have subsequently been published in a special issue I co-edited with Christian in the journal Triple C: Communication, Capitalism & Critique.

There are other academic and activist communities that I am deeply grateful to. Flor Avelino and Julia Witthmayer at the Dutch Research Institute for Transitions in Rotterdam, where I spent some months in 2017. The inhabitants of the intentional communities of Granara (Italy) and Auroville (India), which I have visited on multiple occasions. The Global Ecovillage Network and Anna Kovasna. The Territori in Libera Transizione research group and the faculty involved in the Saperi in Transizione master’s programme, co-hosted by the universities of Trento, Verona and Parma (Italy). The Copenhagen contingent of wonderful friends and colleagues: Catia Gregoratti, Laura Horn, Nicole Doerr and Vasna Ramasar. The Women on the Verge collective, coordinated by Ana Cecilia Dinerstein. The Politics, Ontologies and Ecologies research group, spearheaded by Luigi Pellizzoni. The Heilbroner Center for Capitalism Studies at The New School, co-directed by William Milberg and Julia Ott.
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The Global Tapestry of Alternatives and Ashish Kothari. The Real Utopias project in memory of Erik Olin Wright, coordinated by Tom Malleson.

Last but not least, colleagues in the Department of Management, Politics and Philosophy at Copenhagen Business School, in particular the Civil Society research group: Liv Egholm, Lars Bo Kaspersen, Andreas Møller Mulvad, Mathias Hein Jessen, Maj Grasten, Dimitra Makri Andersen, Anders Sevelsted, Christiane Mossin and Cristine Dyhrberg Højghaard. Liv Egholm, in particular, supported me during the preparation of my Marie-Skłodowska Curie fellowship application. She persistently believed in my project and sensibly suggested that I centre its theoretical focus on prefigurative politics. This edited volume, in fact, is among the publications stemming from the theoretical work I conducted for my Marie-Skłodowska Curie project titled ‘EcoLabSS – Ecovillages as Laboratories of Sustainability and Social Change’ (2018–2024), financed by the European Commission (grant number 798866).

I would also like to thank all the students, co-lecturers and guests involved in the ‘Reimagining Capitalism: Towards Just and Sustainable Futures’ course that I am thoroughly enjoying coordinating and teaching at Copenhagen Business School and which has worked as a sounding board for some ideas expressed in this book.

I would like to close these acknowledgments by thanking those who have given me constant unconditional emotional support during what have turned out to be difficult years. My close and extended family, spread across the four corners of the world. My childhood and university friends: Elena Aldi and Marina Maffezzoli, Serida Catalano, Matteo Bassoli, Alessio Bertolini, Laura De Boni, Anna Panarello, Serena Galligani and Maria Giovanna Scarale. And, above all, my mother, Elzbieta Jamroz, my late father, Riccardo Monticelli, and my husband and comrade in life, Torsten Geelan, to whom this book is dedicated.
