Notes on Contributors

Allison Boggis was an Associate Professor at the University of Suffolk until her retirement in 2020. Allison specialised in Disability and Childhood Studies.

Sarah Coombs was a Senior Lecturer in Childhood Studies at the University of Suffolk and is currently a Visiting Senior Fellow. Sarah’s research interests include the sociologies of death and childhood, and qualitative research with children.

Michal Dolev-Cohen is a Senior Lecturer and researcher in cyberpsychology. She is the head of the Centre for Learning and Research Online Vulnerability, in the Educational Counselling Program, Faculty of Graduate Studies, at Oranim Academic College of Education. Michal specialises in researching online sexuality among adolescents.

Michelle Lyttle Storrod is an Assistant Professor of Criminal Justice at Widener University. Michelle’s research focuses on how phones and social media are involved in the victimisation and criminalisation of young people in the criminal legal system.

Samia Michail is a Lecturer and researcher at Western Sydney University. Samia is interested in participatory research methodologies that employ children’s rights to determine their own well-being and explore the impact of social structures and processes on child voice.

Heather Montgomery is Professor of Anthropology and Childhood at The Open University. She is currently writing a book on the history of violence against children in the home to be published by Polity in 2023.

Sarah Richards is an Associate Professor and currently Head of the Doctoral College at the University of Suffolk. Sarah’s research interests include inter-country adoption and research with children.

Tsameret Ricon is Head of the Educational Counselling Program and a Senior Lecturer in the Faculty of Graduate Studies, Oranim Academic College of Education. Her research interests include parenting and adolescent relationships, sexual education, childhood stress, professional development of educational counsellors, and parental involvement in education systems.

Pallawi Sinha is a Lecturer in Childhood Studies at the University of Suffolk. Her research interests include comparative and international childhood and education, indigenous, ‘peripheral’, and marginalised communities, socially responsive and arts-driven research, and the ethics and politics of education and research.

Marianna Stella is a Senior Lecturer in Education and Childhood at the University of Suffolk. Marianna specialises in dyslexia and primary education.

Katie Tyrrell is a Research Fellow at the University of Suffolk. Katie has expertise in qualitative research focused on social justice and well-being in childhood and youth.