Acknowledgements

I could not have written this book without the help and support from dear colleagues, friends, and family. I would like to thank my reading group in economic sociology, Janus Hansen, Eva Iris Otto, Rasmus Munksgaard, Andreas Gregersen, and Jacob Ørmen, who have given important feedback at various stages of the analysis. Also, thank you to my colleagues in the Section of Digital Communication and the Centre for Tracking and Society at the University of Copenhagen for valuable feedback, not least Klaus Bruhn Jensen, who has been kind enough to give parts of the book a critical read. I would like to thank Paul Stevens, my editor, and Vincent Manzerolle for going through the first version of the manuscript, as well as David Nieborg for useful comments in the final stages of editing. Moreover, thanks go to Victor Kolind, Jacob Larsen, and Selda Eren Kanat, who have supported me in my ongoing effort to develop data collection tools suitable for the task at hand, and Ole Comoll who has provided visuals for the figures in Chapter 6. Finally, I would like to thank my husband and children, who have endured my occasional physical and mental absence throughout the writing process.
