Acknowledgements

First and foremost, I would like to thank the many people who participated in this study as interviewees. Were it not for their generosity and strength, this book would not have been possible. Particular thanks to those who entrusted me with sensitive or distressing testimonies, and to those who welcomed me into their communities as a friend. I hope that this book does justice to your experiences, and to those of the people you support in detention.

It takes a village to raise a researcher, and I am profoundly grateful for mine. This book began as a PhD project at the University of Sydney (USYD), and was extended, reimagined and refined during Postdoctoral Research Fellowships at the University of Queensland (UQ) and the University of Wollongong (UOW). The fieldwork that informs this book was funded by an Australian Research Training Program Stipend Scholarship, a USYD Travel Grant, and a UQ Small Research Grant. I gratefully acknowledge both this financial support and the institutional backing it represents.

I owe a debt of gratitude to innumerable colleagues within and beyond USYD, UQ and UOW. While it is not possible to thank everyone individually, several people deserve specific acknowledgement. Heartfelt thanks to Dr David Neil, without whose long-term influence and intellectual generosity this book may never have been started, and would certainly not exist in its current form. Deepest gratitude to my PhD supervisors, Dr Susan Banki and Professor Stephen Castles, who provided guidance, oversight and support through the doctoral project that began this research. Sincerest thanks to Professor Gillian Triggs, Professor Scott Poynting and Associate Professor Caroline Fleay, who gave valuable feedback concerning that initial project and galvanized me in my desire to continue this work. Warmest thanks to mentors Professor Greg Marston, Professor Gaby Ramia and Professor Alex Broom – as well as dear friends and writing companions Dr Louise St Guillaume, Dr Derya Ozkul and Dr Dora Anthony – who have provided unwavering encouragement and gentle accountability as this book has taken form. Deepest gratitude to psychologist Dr Carole Carter, who helped me to navigate my own emotions during fieldwork for this project, and to the countless people who – at different times and in different ways – have lent me their wisdom and hope.

Thank you to the team at Bristol University Press/Policy Press who saw the potential in this book and guided me through the publication process. Particular thanks to editor Shannon Kneis, series editor Professor Nando Sigona, and project manager Matt Deacon. Thank you also to Ella Sellwood and the anonymous reviewers who read the manuscript for this book prior to its publication and provided feedback.

Finally, deepest thanks to my family, and to those dear friends who qualify as such. I think in particular of my Mum and Dad; of Luke, Simone, Hayden and Emily; of David; of Jack and Marg; and of my MHS, John Street and contemplative community friends. You have nurtured my dreams, supported my endeavours, celebrated my successes, and been my soft place to land. I appreciate you immensely and love you beyond words.
