Notes on Contributors

Helen U. Agu is Senior Lecturer in Environmental, Climate Change and Conservation Law, Department of International and Comparative Law, University of Nigeria, Enugu Campus. She is an African Futures fellow of the Alliance for Africa Partnership at Michigan State University, United States and a Research Fellow of the Raoul Wallenberg Institute for Humanitarian Law (Lund, Sweden) at the Centre for Human Rights, Addis Ababa University, Ethiopia. Her research interests centre on gendered dimensions of wildlife crime, climate change and conservation. She holds a BSc in agricultural education, bachelor’s, master’s and doctoral degrees in environmental law and policy from the University of Nigeria. She has published many journal articles and book chapters and co-edited the volume Women and Wildlife Trafficking (Wiley-Blackwell, 2022).

Halil Ibrahim Bahar graduated from the Police Academy in 1988 in Turkey. He earned his MA and PhD from the Department of Criminology, Leicester University, UK. From 1995 to 2015, Dr Bahar taught sociology, criminology and victimology at the Faculty of Security Sciences and the Institute for Security Sciences at the Police Academy. Currently, Dr Bahar is a freelance researcher in Ankara. His research interests include the sociology of institutions, green crime, victimology, urbanisation and crime. Some of his publications have appeared in International Criminology, International Journal for Crime, Justice and Social Democracy and The Journal of Population, Space and Place.

Stephen R. Burrell is Assistant Professor (Research) in the Department of Sociology, Durham University, UK. He is currently undertaking a Leverhulme Early Fellowship on masculinity and violence in the climate crisis, and engaging men and boys in caring for the environment. Stephen is Deputy Director of Durham’s Centre for Research into Violence and Abuse, where he is part of a team conducting research on men, masculinities and social change (for more information see www.mmasc.org.uk). Together with Sandy Ruxton, Stephen co–hosts a podcast called ‘Now and Men: Current Conversations on Men’s Lives’.
Pamela Davies is Professor of Criminology and Head of the Criminology subject group in the Department of Social Sciences at Northumbria University, UK. Pamela’s research interests coalesce around gender, crime, harm and victimisation, and the tensions around social and environmental justice. She has edited numerous textbooks and scholarly volumes and has published widely on the subject of victimisation and social harm. She is the series editor of the Palgrave Macmillan ‘Victims and Victimology’ book series (with Associate Professor Tyrone Kirchengast, University of New South Wales, Sydney).

María-Ángeles Fuentes-Loureiro holds a PhD in law from the University of A Coruña, Spain, where she presented her dissertation on environmental criminality in the field of waste and currently works as Lecturer in Criminal Law. In her research career, she has studied crimes against the environment and green criminology issues. Other secondary research lines are animal protection and corruption in the environmental field, urban planning and public procurement. She has presented her work at more than 20 conferences, and has published various book chapters, scientific reports and journal articles in Spain, Italy and the United States.

Ekaterina Gladkova is Lecturer in Sociology and Criminology at Northumbria University, UK. She is interested in critical understandings of interrelations/interconnections between the environment, human and nonhuman. Ekaterina has published in journals such as Critical Criminology, Journal of White Collar and Corporate Crime, International Journal for Crime, Justice and Social Democracy and Polar Research.

Meredith L. Gore is Associate Professor of Human Dimensions of Global Environmental Change in the Department of Geographical Sciences at University of Maryland, College Park, United States. Her research focuses on human–environment relationships; she has expertise in conservation criminology, community-based conservation, science diplomacy, and gender in wildlife. She is the editor and author of Conservation Criminology (Wiley-Blackwell, 2017) and co-editor of Women and Wildlife Trafficking (Wiley-Blackwell, 2022). Meredith held a post-doc at Michigan State University, earned her PhD at Cornell University, MA at the George Washington University and BA at Brandeis University.

Sandya Hewamanne is Professor of Anthropology and Director of the Center for Global South Studies at the University of Essex, UK. She is the author of Stitching Identities in a Free Trade Zone: Gender and Politics in Sri Lanka (University of Pennsylvania Press, 2008); Sri Lanka's Global Factory Workers: (Un)Disciplined Desires and Sexual Struggles in a Post-Colonial Society (Routledge, 2016); Re-stitching Identities in Rural Sri Lanka: Gender, Neoliberalism and the Politics of Contentment (University of Pennsylvania Press, 2020) and the co-editor of The Political Economy of Post-COVID Life and Work in the Global South: Pandemic and Precarity (Springer, 2022). She is the Founder, Director of IMPACT-Global Work, a non-profit which connects academics and activists to initiate positive policy changes for workers in the Global South.

James Heydon is Assistant Professor of Criminology in the School of Sociology and Social Policy at the University of Nottingham, UK. James’s research interests centre on crimes of the powerful more broadly and environmental harm specifically. In particular, he is interested in the effectiveness of formal and informal social controls on the behaviour of individuals, states and corporate actors. This includes the more traditional ‘top-down’ elements, such as law and regulation, but also those deemed ‘bottom-up’, such as the application of deviance labels by ‘non-elite’ groups.

Aphra Hope-Forest (she/her) was carrying out a research project at Northumbria University when she collected these data. Her research interests included gender differences in attitudes to nonhuman animals, and how students with different learning styles create their preferred learning environments. She received a BSc in Zoology from Cardiff University and is now working for the Ministry of Justice.

Rachel Killean is Senior Lecturer at Sydney Law School and a member of the Sydney Institute of Criminology, the Sydney Southeast Asia Centre, and the Sydney Environment Institute, Australia. Prior to joining Sydney Law School, she was Senior Lecturer at the Queen’s University Belfast School of Law. Dr Killean’s research centres responses to violence, with a focus on transitional justice, victims’ rights, sexual and gender-based violence, and harms perpetrated against the natural world.

Lynda M. Korimboccus is Lecturer in Sociology at West Lothian College, Scotland, and a PhD sociology student at the University of East Anglia, UK, investigating the lived experiences of young vegan children in Scottish education. An advocate for equity and justice, Lynda is an activist scholar and a committed ethical vegan and grassroots campaigner since 1999. She is Editor-in-Chief of the Student Journal of Vegan Sociology, a volunteer writer for Faunalytics, and a member of both the Researcher and Education Networks of the Vegan Society.

Benja Kromash (he/him) is originally from Chicago, United States, where he first found his passions for environmental justice, queer community and racial equity. Benja completed his undergraduate degree at Macalester College prior to serving as a Peace Corps Volunteer in Paraguay. Following his work on environmental education and conservation in Paraguay, Benja completed his master’s degree in Sociology at Colorado State University. Today, Benja lives in Denver, Colorado, where he works at the non-profit Volunteers for Outdoor Colorado. In his spare time, he enjoys pottery, hiking and cheering on local drag queens.

Angeline Marie Letourneau is a PhD candidate in environmental sociology at the University of Alberta whose research focuses on gendering the sociology of climate change. Angeline’s work examines the affective influence of identities under threat in the age of environmental and climate crisis, and the contribution of these identity processes to widening cultural divisions and political polarisation. Her research is inspired by the possibility of synergies despite differences. Angeline’s prior experience in the energy industry and non-profit landscape informs her attention to purposeful intervention and actionable outputs. Her work has been published in such journals as Environmental Sociology and Climatic Change.

Emma Milne is Associate Professor of Criminal Law and Criminal Justice at Durham University. She is a socio-legal scholar and feminist criminologist. Emma’s research is interdisciplinary, focusing on criminal law and justice responses to infant killing and foetal harm. The wider context of Emma’s work is social controls and regulations of women, notably of pregnancy, sex and motherhood. Emma’s monograph Criminal Justice Responses to Maternal Filicide: Judging the Failed Mother was published in 2021 (Emerald Publishing Limited). She co-authored Sex and Crime (SAGE, 2020), and co-edited Women and the Criminal Justice System: Failing Victims and Offenders? (Palgrave, 2018).

Josiah C. Ogbuka is Research Fellow and Lecturer at the Institute of Maritime Studies, University of Nigeria, Enugu Campus, Nigeria. His areas of research interest include marine pollution management, marine biogeochemistry, marine governance and marine spatial planning, wildlife conservation, circular economy and sustainability, climate change and environmental changes, and has published in some of these areas. He holds a BSc in education/biology, and MSc in marine environmental protection (UK) and PhD (forthcoming).

Delon Alain Omrow is Instructor in the Faculty of Social Science and Humanities at Ontario Tech University, Canada. He earned his undergraduate and graduate degrees in criminology from York University and the University of Toronto, respectively. He completed his PhD at York University, specialising in green criminology, environmental justice and biosecurity. He is currently completing a postdoc at Ontario Tech University, exploring what he refers to as racialised ecologies and the androcentric-anthropocentric symbiosis of trauma; and the way the lived experiences of the disempowered and marginalised are articulated through contemporary environmental discourse.

Laurence Pedroni (he/they) is originally from San Jose, California, where he found his passion for challenging systems of oppression and liberation ideologies. Laurence completed his degrees in psychology and justice studies before completing his master’s degree in justice studies at San Jose State University. He continues to teach at San Jose State University. He is currently completing his PhD at Colorado State University while living in Denver, Colorado, where he spends most of his time walking his German Shepherd, Artemis, and practising martial arts.

Kay Peggs is Professor of Criminology and Sociology at Kingston University, UK and is a Fellow of the Oxford Centre for Animal Ethics. Her current research examines the persistence of complex inequalities associated with species. Kay has published widely on this theme and her books include Animals and Sociology (Palgrave, 2012), Experiments, Animal Bodies and Human Values (Routledge, forthcoming) and co-authored Not Consuming Animals: Ethics, Environment and Lifestyle Choices (Routledge, forthcoming). Kay is also a research methods specialist, and is co-editor of two major four-volume sets, Observation Methods (SAGE, 2013) and Critical Social Research Ethics (SAGE, 2018).

Nigel South is Emeritus Professor of Sociology at the University of Essex, UK. He has made various contributions to the development of ‘green criminology’ including co-authoring Green Cultural Criminology (Routledge, 2014) and Water, Crime and Security in the Twenty-First Century (Palgrave, 2018), as well as co-editing the International Handbook of Green Criminology (2nd edn, Routledge, 2020). In 2022 he received the ‘Outstanding Achievement Award’ from the British Society of Criminology and in 2013 received a ‘Lifetime Achievement Award’ from the American Society of Criminology, Division on Critical Criminology and Social Justice.

Daniela Suárez Vargas is a PhD researcher in the School of Law at Queen’s University Belfast, UK. She is a Northern Bridge Consortium doctoral scholar, funded by the Arts and Humanities Research Council of the UK. Daniela is a qualified lawyer from Universidad del Rosario, Colombia. She holds an LLM from Queen’s University Belfast and a postgraduate certificate in gender, conflict, and transitional justice from Ulster University. Daniela’s doctoral project examines narratives of victimhood in transitional justice, focusing on the case of sexual violence within armed groups in Colombia. Her research interests include transitional justice, international criminal law, human rights and gender.

Rob White is Emeritus Distinguished Professor of Criminology at the University of Tasmania, Australia. He has published extensively in the areas of youth studies, criminology and eco-justice. Among his recent books are Advanced Introduction to Applied Green Criminology (Edward Elgar, 2023), Theorising Green Criminology (Routledge, 2022) and Critical Forensic Studies (with Roberta Julian and Loene Howes) (Routledge, 2022). He is Editor-in-Chief of Forensic Science International: Animals and Environments.

Corey Lee Wrenn is Lecturer in Sociology at the University of Kent, UK, and specialises in vegan studies and the politics of animal rights mobilisation. She is the author of A Rational Approach to Animal Rights (Palgrave, 2016), Piecemeal Protest: Animal Rights in the Age of Nonprofits (University of Michigan Press, 2019) and Animals in Irish Society (SUNY Press, 2021). She has served as the Chair of the Animals and Society Section of the American Sociological Association (2018–21) and the Research Advisory Committee of the Vegan Society.

Tanya Wyatt was Professor of Criminology at Northumbria University. She is a green criminologist specialising in wildlife crime and trafficking and nonhuman animal abuse and harm. Her research explores the intersections with organised crime, corporate crime and corruption. Her most recent books are Is CITES Protecting Wildlife? Assessing Implementation and Compliance (Earthscan, 2021) and Wildlife Trafficking: A Deconstruction of the Crime, Victims and Offenders (Palgrave Macmillan, 2021).