This book presents a grammatical analysis of Lillooet, an Interior Salish language spoken in British Columbia, Canada. It was originally prepared as a doctoral dissertation for the University of Amsterdam. The dissertation was successfully defended in 1985 and distributed in a limited edition by the University of Amsterdam print shop. Material for the dissertation was collected in the summers of 1972, 1973, and 1974 in the town of Lillooet, and during various periods from 1975 through 1984 in Mount Currie and Lillooet. Subsequent field work was done for brief periods in 1988 and 1992, yielding some new insights that are incorporated into this edition.

Of the many people who helped me prepare this book, I wish to thank first of all my Lillooet-speaking consultants. I am especially grateful to the late Mr. Sam Mitchell of Fountain; the late Mrs. Martina LaRochelle of Lillooet; the late Mr. Bill Edwards of Pavilion; and Mrs. Marie Leo, the late Mrs. Rosie Joseph, Mrs. Margaret Lester, the late Mrs. Adelina Williams, the late Mr. Charles Mack Seymour, Mr. Joe Joseph, Mr. Alec Peters, and Mr. Ernie Pascal, all of Mount Currie. A special word of thanks is due to Ms. Lorna Williams and Ms. Marie Abraham, both of Mount Currie, who belong to a younger generation of Lillooet speakers and with whom I had many fruitful discussions on the linguistic analysis of Lillooet when the three of us were employed by the Mount Currie Cultural/Educational Centre between 1975 and 1984.

Of the linguists who have helped me, I am most deeply indebted to my dissertation supervisors, the late Dr. Simon C. Dik of the University of Amsterdam and Dr. M. Dale Kinkade of the University of British Columbia. I also owe a debt of gratitude to Dr. Aert H. Kuipers (formerly of the University of Leyden, the Netherlands, now retired), who guided the initial stages of my work on Lillooet. Others who deserve my gratitude are Dr. Henk F. Nater and Dr. John C. Rath, with whom I have had many vigorous (and invigorating) discussions on Salish and general linguistics that greatly enhanced my insight into linguistic matters; Mr. Randy Bouchard, who provided logistical and linguistic assistance during my first summer of field work; and Dr. Thomas M. Hess of the University of Victoria, British Columbia, Dr. Laurence C. Thompson (formerly of the University of Hawaii, now retired), M. Terry Thompson, Dr. Steven M. Egesdal, and the many other Salishists who gave insightful comments on earlier copies of my work, from which I greatly benefited. I also wish to thank Mr. Jan A. Timmers, who carefully read an earlier version of the completed dissertation and ferreted out a large number of typographical and other errors, and Dr. Willem F. Adelaar of the University of Leyden, who, as a member of my doctoral committee, identified a number of incorrect cross-references that had resulted from the final revision of the dissertation and also made very valuable suggestions for a deeper analysis of some of the issues raised in the earlier versions of this book. Dr. Nancy J. Turner of the University of Victoria deserves credit for involving me in the many Lillooet ethnobotanical research projects that she undertook while I was working on the language, which enabled me to collect a large number of botanical terms that I would otherwise have missed.

My research after 1985 has benefited greatly from input by Drs. Kinkade, Hess, and Egesdal, and (besides many others) Dr. Barry F. Carlson and Dr. Thomas Hukari, both of the University of Victoria, Dr. Anthony Mattina of the University of Montana, and Dr. Brent Galloway of the Saskatchewan Indian Federated College.

I gratefully acknowledge the support of the Netherlands Organization for the Advancement of Pure Research (ZWO), which provided me with the funds to carry out my first three summers of field work, through Research Grant 39-10. I also owe a debt of gratitude to the following persons and institutions for hiring me to work in Mount Currie in 1975-84: Mrs. Georgina Nelson and the Ts'zil Board of Education (Mount Currie), Dr. June Wyatt and Simon Fraser University (Burnaby), and Mr. Robert Irvine of Capilano College (North Vancouver). A special word of thanks is due to the Amsterdam University Society (AUV) and the Leyden University Foundation (LUF) for jointly sponsoring my airplane flight to the Netherlands in 1985, thereby enabling me to defend my dissertation. And a big thank-you is definitely in order for my sister Herma, who together with her (and my) friends Folkert Leemans, Fop Bos, and Els Bos-Hoffenaar organized the festivities after my dissertation defence.

From 1985 to 1989 my research on Salish was made possible by the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada (SSHRCC), through Research Grant 410-85-0062 and Postdoctoral Fellowships 456-87-0358 and 457-88-0086. I also gratefully acknowledge the hospitality of the Department of Linguistics at the University of Victoria, where from 1985 to 1989
I enjoyed the status of Visiting Scholar, under the aegis of the former and current Department Heads, Dr. Henry J. Warkentyne and Dr. Joseph F. Kess.

Preparation of this book would not have been possible without the assistance and advice of Dr. Patricia A. Shaw of the Department of Linguistics at the University of British Columbia, and of the staff at UBC Press, in particular Ms. Laura Macleod, Ms. Camilla Jenkins, and Ms. Holly Keller-Brohman. I am also very grateful to Mr. Colin Carter of the Department of Computer Science at the University of Regina, who devised the Lillooet font that is used in this book and who has assisted me throughout with his seemingly limitless supply of patience and computer knowledge. Mr. Francis J. Chow deserves my gratitude for the meticulous way in which he has edited and typeset my manuscript.

It is with profound gratitude that I pay homage to my father and mother, Arie van Eijk (who passed away in 1988) and Annigje van Eijk- Van der Wilt, whose unstinting moral and financial support and keen interest in my work helped me through many a dark moment during the preparation of my dissertation. I am also deeply grateful to my mother-in-law, Angeline van Leeuwen-De Jong, whose delightful personality has been a constant source of joy and whose largesse made it possible for my wife and children to fly to the Netherlands in 1985 and share in one of the most important moments of my scholarly career. With deep respect I salute my late father-in-law, Henri Albert van Leeuwen, who passed away in 1980. I will be amply rewarded if my book reflects at least some of the commitment to quality and the virtues of good, hard work that these four people have consistently shown.

Last, but certainly not least, I wish to thank my wife, Sonja, for her patience and understanding during the long time it took me to prepare this book, and for her moral support at the many difficult moments when the grammatical complexities of Lillooet threatened to overwhelm me. Our two sons, Jesse and Mark, deserve my gratitude for the joy they have brought to my life and for showing me that there is life (a lot of it, in fact) outside linguistics.
