Acknowledgments

My first thanks go to David Roozen, who encouraged me to turn an idea into a research proposal for the Lilly Endowment. The Endowment generously funded the first year of the research, with the Hartford Seminary providing support services. At a later stage, the National Endowment for the Humanities awarded me a fellowship that funded another year, and First Presbyterian Church (Buffalo) provided me with an office. The Center of Theological Inquiry subsequently invited me for an eight-month stay at its lovely facilities in Princeton. And at the end, Frontier Science and Technology Research Foundation allowed me to go on half-time status for seven months to rewrite the manuscript. I am very grateful to William Elgie, Gregory Pavlov, Charles Ranney, and Suzanne Siminski for making this possible.

My greatest debts, however, are to the organizations that allowed me into their midst knowing that what I eventually would write about them might not be entirely favorable, to the staff who spent countless hours assisting my research, and to the participants who shared their thoughts and feelings with me. Among these organizations are MICAH, in Milwaukee; PACT, in San Jose; VOICE, in Buffalo; BUILD, in Baltimore; the Catholic Campaign for Human Development; the Gamaliel Foundation; the Pacific Institute for Community Organizing; Amnesty International–USA; two local Amnesty groups; Interfaith Funders; Citizens for Community Values, in Cincinnati; and the Cincinnati Area Coalition Against U.S. Intervention. I have also drawn on my experiences as part of many other activist groups, and hope my comrades in those groups will tolerate my turning to research use what I observed as a participant. The individuals who granted me the privilege of interviewing them or provided access and materials are mostly found speaking in the pages of the book; three who are not but deserve thanks are Ana Garcia-Ashley of MICAH, Diana Miller of PACT, and Jeri Sundvall of the Workers Organizing Committee.

I also wish to thank the many scholars and activists who read drafts, versions, or proposals related to this research or discussed the ideas that would later become this book. These people have improved it immeasurably. They include John Archer, Robert Bellah, Karen Bloomquist, Gene Burns, José Carrasco, Mary Ann Clawson, Paul DiMaggio, Craig Dykstra, Nina Eliasoph, Cynthia Eller, John Evans, Ward Ewing, David Fergusson, Charles Glock, Niels Gregersen, Benton Johnson, Robert Kanner, Ezra Kopelowitz, Michele Lamont, Michael Lerner, Paul Lichterman, Laura Mangan, David Mann, Bruce McKay, Mike Miller, Jack Murtagh, Richard Peterson, Francesca Polletta, Eric Rambo, David Roozen, Leigh Schmidt, Philip Selznick, Susan Stall, Jeffrey Stout, Heidi Swarts, Ann Swidler, Tamara Thornton, Michael Walzer, R. Stephen Warner, James Weinstein, Rhys Williams, Richard Wood, Robert Wuthnow, and anonymous reviewers.

I was fortunate in having able research assistance at many stages of the project, particularly from Barbara Beck, Tracey Gels, Bruce Hall, Paula Moore, Charlotte Pressler, Anna Reckin, Teresa Reinders, and Cheryl Wiggins. Their skill and commitment greatly surpassed their pay.

At the University of Chicago Press, Douglas Mitchell and Robert Devens have shepherded the project through with great diligence. I was singularly fortunate in having Alan Wolfe as my series editor. His comments greatly assisted in the revisions.

Last but far from least is my wife, Gail Radford, who supported and assisted this enterprise in ways too numerous to list. She read several drafts, improving the book immensely.
