I would like to thank all those who made this work possible and helped me to deal with its imperfections. The Inter-University Committee on Travel Grants and the International Research and Exchange Board enabled me to have two extensive stays in the Soviet Union. The University of Chicago, through its Social Science Research Committee, College Research Committee, and Slavic Committee, provided generous support for my various research needs. I want to thank the archivists of the various repositories where I worked for their patience and assistance, especially the staff of the State Historical Archive in Leningrad who located and made available to me the numerous tomes of service lists and materials on the judicial reform.

I owe a great debt to the many Soviet scholars who shared their vast knowledge and understanding of Russian history and sources with me. P. A. Zaionchkovskii has been a kind and learned advisor of my research on this subject since its beginning in 1966. His assistance in directing me to little known archival and published sources was crucial in opening new avenues of interest. I. I. Dmitriev helped me with valuable advice on historical materials and varied approaches to them. V. G. Chernukha and V. R. Leikina-Svirskaiia also were generous with their bibliographical knowledge and suggestions on my research.

I want to thank the many scholars who have read all or part of the manuscript at various stages of preparation: Leopold Haimson, Richard Hellie, Arcadius Kahan, Emile Karafiol, Herbert Klein, Walter Pintner, Marc Raeff, S. Frederick Starr, and Marlene Stein Wortman. I am deeply grateful for the time and energy they spent and for the candid and searching criticisms that spurred me in the revisions of this work.
