CONTENTS

PREFACE xv

Part One  THE NATURE OF PROSE FICTION

I  The Novel and the Marvellous

II  The Novel as a Portrait of Life

III  The Ethics of the Novel

INTRODUCTION

page 3

TEXT

I. THE NOVEL AND THE MARVELLOUS

Rejecting romantic improbability. Samuel Richardson 41

A caution against the supernatural. Henry Fielding 42

Romance reformed by the novelist. Tobias Smollett 43

Pleasing delusions. Sarah Fielding 44

Le belle nature. Jean-Jacques Rousseau 44

Combining the marvellous and the probable. Clara Reeve 45

Romance lacks unity of design. Thomas Holcroft 46

The difference between the novel and the romance. Clara Reeve 47

Sunt certi denique fines

Richard Cumberland 47

Mrs. Sarah Green 48

At epic in prose? Anna Barbauld 48

Novel: romance: epic. Sir Walter Scott 49

The historical romance combines the marvellous and the probable

Sir Walter Scott 50

Nathaniel Hawthorne 50

The novelist's sense of conflict

Gustave Flaubert 51

Guy de Maupassant 52

The quality of romance. Robert Louis Stevenson 53

A romantic realist. Joseph Conrad 54

Cutting the cable. Henry James 55
CONTENTS

Ghost stories. Henry James 56
Adjusting the exceptional and the non-exceptional. Thomas Hardy 58

II. THE NOVEL AS A PORTRAIT OF LIFE

A new species of writing. Henry Fielding 59
The bounds of probability. Henry Fielding 60
No ‘sudden conversions’. Samuel Richardson 61
Truth to be kept in sight. Richard Cumberland 62
The offspring of nature. Fanny Burney 63
The paths of common life: Jane Austen’s ‘Emma’. Sir Walter Scott 63
Accidents admissible? Charles Dickens 66
Dickens defends fantasy. Charles Dickens 66
The art of novels is to represent nature. William Makepeace Thackeray 67
Realism compatible with sensationalism. Anthony Trollope 67
Truth lies in the ‘exceptional’. Feodor Dostoevsky 68
Scientific realism. Emile Zola 68
Reality only a spring-board. Gustave Flaubert 69
The naturalist modifies nature. Emile Zola 70
Realists are illusionists. Guy de Maupassant 70
Representative art both realistic and ideal. Robert Louis Stevenson 72
The novel ‘an artificiality distilled from the fruits of observation’. Thomas Hardy 73
Imitation cannot serve as a standard. Leo Tolstoy 74
Art ‘all discrimination and selection’. Henry James 75
Imagined life clearer than reality. Joseph Conrad 76
Is life like this? Virginia Woolf 76
Realism impairs the sense of tragedy. D. H. Lawrence 77
Realism and stylization. André Gide 78
Truth stranger than fiction. Aldous Huxley 79
Not an observer, but a creator. François Mauriac 80
A discussion about categories of fiction:
  Henry James dismisses them 81
  Robert Louis Stevenson remonstrates 82

III. THE ETHICS OF THE NOVEL

The novelist and the young person.
  Samuel Richardson 85
  Jean-Jacques Rousseau 85
  Clara Reeve 86
CONTENTS

Part Two THE GENESIS OF A NOVEL
I The Novelist’s Approach and Equipment
II Germination
III At Work: Effort and Inspiration

INTRODUCTION 111

TEXT 125

I. THE NOVELIST’S APPROACH AND EQUIPMENT

Invoking assistance. Henry Fielding 125
In the destructive element immerse?
- Gustave Flaubert 125
- Herman Melville 126
- George Sand 126
- Feodor Dostoevsky 127

The voice of true feeling.
- Stendhal 127
- Leo Tolstoy 128

Only one tool in the workshop. Robert Louis Stevenson 129
Learning the lesson of the master. Guy de Maupassant 130
The soul of the artist. Leo Tolstoy 131
The watcher at the window. Henry James 131
The business of the novelist. Thomas Hardy 132
The novelist’s most precious possession. Joseph Conrad 132
The novelist’s essential characteristic. Arnold Bennett 133
The novelist’s raison d’être. François Mauriac 133

II. GERMINATION

‘Hence sprung Pamela’. Samuel Richardson 134
‘I thought of Mr. Pickwick’. Charles Dickens 134
Mary Ann Evans into George Eliot. George Eliot 135
A scarlet letter. Nathaniel Hawthorne 136
The beginning of Barchester. Anthony Trollope 136
Henry James is inoculated. Henry James 138
The inception of ‘Nostromo’. Joseph Conrad 139
Proust recaptures the past. Marcel Proust 141
What is it to be? Virginia Woolf 142
No notebooks. Ivy Compton-Burnett 143
CONTENTS

III. THE NOVELIST AT WORK: EFFORT AND INSPIRATION

Richardson in difficulties. Samuel Richardson 144
A carrier's horse. Richard Cumberland 145
Whom the devil drives. Sir Walter Scott 145
No planning. Stendhal 146
What! what! what! how! how! how! Nathaniel Hawthorne 146
250 words every quarter of an hour. Anthony Trollope 147
Miseries and splendours of creation. Gustave Flaubert 148
Pain and travail of soul. Feodor Dostoevsky 149
Flesh in the ink-pot. Leo Tolstoy 150
Copious preliminaries. Henry James 150
Wrestling with the Lord. Joseph Conrad 151
Feathering about. Virginia Woolf 152
The novelist inspired.
  Henry Fielding 154
  Charlotte Brontë 154
  George Eliot 155
  Gustave Flaubert 155
  Henry James 156
  Virginia Woolf 157
  E. M. Forster 158

Part Three  THE CRAFT OF FICTION

I  Structural Problems
   Unity and Coherence
   Plot and Story
   The Time-Factor

II  Narrative Technique

III  Characterization

IV  Dialogue

V  Background

VI  Style

INTRODUCTION 161
I. STRUCTURAL PROBLEMS

Unity and Coherence

Epic regularity. Henry Fielding
Nothing foreign to the design. Henry Fielding
Plot uniform and narrative unbroken. Richard Cumberland
Digressions are the sunshine of reading. Laurence Sterne
No detached episodes. Anna Barbauld
Defending quirks and quiddities. Sir Walter Scott
The ‘man of the hill’ in trouble again. Sir Walter Scott
Circulating the blood of the book through the inserted story. Charles Dickens
Striving for unity. Gustave Flaubert
Two major faults. Feodor Dostoevsky
Episodes distract attention. Anthony Trollope
The artist must suppress much and omit more. Robert Louis Stevenson
The novel all one and continuous. Henry James
Focus. Leo Tolstoy
Form is substance. Henry James
On appearing to digress. Ford Madox Ford
Mastery of perspective. Virginia Woolf
No superfluities. André Gide
Pattern and rhythm. E. M. Forster
Symphonic effect. Gustave Flaubert
The art of fugue. André Gide
The musicalization of fiction. Aldous Huxley

Plot and Story

The novelist must have a story to tell. Anthony Trollope
No story at all is best. Gustave Flaubert
Writing a story for publication in weekly parts. Charles Dickens
A story should be an organism. Thomas Hardy
Story the spoiled child of art. Henry James
A story must convey a sense of inevitability. Ford Madox Ford
Oh dear yes—the novel tells a story. E. M. Forster
Doing away with plot. Mary Mitford
Plot the most insignificant part of a tale. Anthony Trollope
Conventional plot a vulgar coercion. George Eliot
Surprising properties of plot. E. M. Forster
Plot the support of a novel. Ivy Compton-Burnett

Beginnings and endings

Henry Fielding
CONTENTS

Charles Dickens 250
George Eliot 250
Anton Chekhov 250
Ford Madox Ford 251
André Gide 251

The Time-Factor

Fielding sets the pace. Henry Fielding 251
Foreshortening: the problem always there and always formidable. Henry James 252
Allegiance to 'time by the clock'. E. M. Forster 253
The presentness of the past. Marcel Proust 254

II. NARRATIVE TECHNIQUE

Epistolary method improper. Henry Fielding 256
Letters much more lively and affecting. Samuel Richardson. 256
Another vagary. Horace Walpole 257
Letters for the author, omniscient narrative for the reader. Richard Cumberland 257
Three ways of telling a story. Anna Barbauld 258
Epistolary form an antiquated affair. Anton Chekhov 260
Advantages of the letter-system. Thomas Hardy 260
Perils of first-person narrative. Anthony Trollope 260
The terrible fluidity of self-revelation. Henry James 260
The narrator's interpolations in the historical novel. George Sand 262
Many good ways of telling a story. George Eliot 262
Form as varied as content. Leo Tolstoy 265
A certain indirect and oblique view

Henry James 265
Arnold Bennett 267
Joseph Conrad 267

'Bouncing' more important than the 'point of view'. E. M. Forster 268

Exit author?

Richard Cumberland 269
Sir Walter Scott 269
Anthony Trollope 270
Charles Dickens 270
Gustave Flaubert 271
Guy de Maupassant 272
Henry James 272
Ford Madox Ford 273
E. M. Forster 273
CONTENTS

André Gide 273
Aldous Huxley 274

III. CHARACTERIZATION

The dial-plate or the inner workings?
   Henry Fielding 275
   Sarah Fielding 275
   Samuel Richardson 275
   Sir Walter Scott 275

No pictures of perfection
   Henry Fielding 277
   Richard Cumberland 277
   Jane Austen 278
   George Sand 278
   William Makepeace Thackeray 278

No portraits
   Henry Fielding 279
   Stendhal 279
   Charlotte Brontë 280
   George Eliot 280
   George Sand 280
   Charles Dickens 280
   Gustave Flaubert 281
   Wilkie Collins 282
   Robert Louis Stevenson 283
   Henry James 283
   Ford Madox Ford 284
   Ivy Compton-Burnett 284

The novelist's characters must be real to him. Anthony Trollope 285
The novelist haunted by his characters. Joseph Conrad 286
L'image en disponibilité. Henry James 286
'Flat' and 'round' characters. E. M. Forster 288
Abandoning the 'old stable ego'. D. H. Lawrence 289
All novels deal with character. Virginia Woolf 290
A character has to be conventionalized. Arnold Bennett 290
Authenticity. André Gide 291

IV. DIALOGUE

Strong language. Tobias Smollett 292
Flaubert describes his difficulties to Louise Colet. Gustave Flaubert 292
Relevant, natural, short. Anthony Trollope 294
Organic and dramatic. Henry James 295
xii
CONTENTS

Further problems. Ford Madox Ford 297
Stylization. Ivy Compton-Burnett 297

V. BACKGROUND

Scott transforms Melrose. Sir Walter Scott 299
The setting of 'Wuthering Heights'. Charlotte Brontë 300
Too much background. George Eliot 301
A new English county. Anthony Trollope 301
Wessex. Thomas Hardy 301
The scientific importance of background. Emile Zola 302
Map and almanack. Robert Louis Stevenson 303
The selection of telling detail. Anton Chekhov 304
Henry James follows the wrong master. Henry James 305
Pursuing the Guermantes' way. Marcel Proust 306
Background reduced to a minimum. Ivy Compton-Burnett 307

VI. STYLE

The judgment of style. Henry Fielding 308
Richardson's style. Anna Barbauld 308
The voice of true feeling in epistolary narrative. Jean-Jacques Rousseau 309
Jane Austen becomes self-conscious. Jane Austen 311
Clear and simple. Stendhal 312
Flaubert on the art of writing. Gustave Flaubert 312
A protest. George Sand 314
The familiar style. George Eliot 314
Byron a model. Wilkie Collins 315
How to be intelligible and harmonious. Anthony Trollope 315
Naturalism and the grand style. Emile Zola 316
Exactness. Guy de Maupassant 317
On not having too much style. Thomas Hardy 318
An elegant and pregnant texture. Robert Louis Stevenson 318
The craft of writing. Joseph Conrad 319
Fresh, usual words. Ford Madox Ford 321
Thought charged with emotion. André Gide 322
Effects of the long week-end (1918–1939). E. M. Forster 322

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS 323
INDEX 325

xiii
TO THE MEMORY OF
MY FATHER