This book would not have been possible without the friendship, conversation, encouragement, critical commentary, advice, and laughter of the following people, and I thank them all:

Special thanks are due to Susan Wragg, Molly Conisbee, and Faya Causey.

I am extremely grateful to the series editors, Jessica Berman and Paul Saint-Amour, as well as Columbia editor Philip Leventhal, for their patience and gentle-but-firm encouragement.
I am indebted to the following institutions for their support: Le Musée National de l’Éducation, Rouen, France; La Bibliothèque Diderot de Lyon, France; the Moorland-Spingarn Research Center, Howard University; the Princeton University Committee on Research in the Humanities and Social Sciences; the Princeton Institute for International and Regional Studies; Princeton University Department of Comparative Literature; Yale University Department of Comparative Literature; New York University Department of Comparative Literature.

I thank Siona Wilson, who traveled the road with me in love and companionship.