Bridget Flannery-McCoy first saw the value of this volume and worked with us in developing the conceptual framework. Her keen editorial advice and steadfast commitment to this project made this book possible. After Bridget left Columbia University Press, Stephen Wesley became our editor. We were lucky to once again have a smart, energetic and enthusiastic supporter of our work. The final deadline for submission was during the height of the COVID-19 pandemic. Stephen was enormously patient and kind during this otherwise tumultuous and uncertain time.

Special thanks to Marisa Lastres and Christian P. Winting for their help with the manuscript as it moved through various stages at CUP. We are also deeply grateful to the production team for preparing the book for publication, most notably Ben Kolstad and his team of copyeditors.

Our beloved friend, brilliant classmate, inspiring colleague, and committed co-editor T.K. unexpectedly died before the publication of this book. She was working on her essay 48 hours before she transitioned. We decided to publish her essay as-is. We wanted not only to share with the world evidence of her most beautiful mind and capacious historical imagination, but also to create a permanent record of her words, hermetically sealed and permanently archived in the Library of Congress.

Finally, we would like to thank the contributors of the volume, who labored over the course of many years on their essays. They stuck with the volume because they wanted to offer a tribute to our mentor Eric Foner, who has profoundly shaped our lives in more ways than we know or would even wish to tally.
