This book is the result of many years’ reading, reflection, and writing. Many individuals contributed in one way or another to its completion. My first debt of thanks is to Professor Darryl Sterk (Shi Dailun), who has helped me by translating and editing. Without his help, I would have had a much more difficult time completing this book. Also, without Chen Lihou (Tulip), my best friend in my university years, I probably would not have started my friendship with Darryl. Lihou will never read this book, but she is remembered with affection.

Professor David Der-wei Wang at Harvard suggested that I share my research on 1970s Taiwan with English readers in book form on his visit to the Academia Sinica long ago. I doubt it would have been possible to embark on the project without his encouragement. I am deeply grateful to him. Professor Richard Madsen has always supported me since I became his student at University of California, San Diego, as far back as 1992. It has been my good fortune to have him as an advisor and part of my academic career. I feel profound gratitude to him.

At the early stage of writing the book, a period of research at the International Consortium for Research in the Humanities (IKGF), University Erlangen-Nuremberg, in 2013 was instrumental in allowing me to reorganize part of the manuscript. I am grateful to Professor Thomas Fröhlich for his friendship and kind invitation to visit the IKGF.
The resources, support, and culture of the Institute of Sociology, Academia Sinica, where I have been affiliated, allowed me to pursue book writing more aggressively. I want to thank my research assistants, Chang Jinwen, Yeh Chunchiao, and Lee Chiahsuan, who also helped in the completion of this book.

My earlier projects on 1970s Taiwan were funded by Taiwan’s National Science Council, the former incarnation of the Ministry of Science and Technology (NSC-89-2412-H-001-023, NSC-90-2412-H-001-012, NSC-91-2412-H-001-005, NSC-92-2412-H-001-001, and NSC-96-2412-H-001-015-MY2). This book is based on my Chinese-language book, which carried the English title Return to Reality: Political and Cultural Change in 1970s Taiwan and the Postwar Generation, 2nd ed. (Taipei: Institute of Sociology, Academia Sinica, 2010). Part of chapters 2, 3, and 6 of this book were published, respectively, in The Sixties: A Journal of History, Politics and Culture 3, no. 1; Oriens Extremus, no. 52; and Studies in Ethnicity and Nationalism 18, no. 2. I would like to thank the two anonymous reviewers and my editor at Columbia University Press, Christine Dunbar, for their constructive comments and suggestions, which helped me improve the manuscript.

My mother, Li Yen, has always been a model for me of hard work and self-reliance. My wife, Yang Jinshi, has helped me make my dreams come true for most of my life. I owe more to her than I can say, for her quiet strength, congenial company, and enduring love through the vicissitudes of life. Our son, Yunchung, has brought us the sweetest joy of life by being so wonderful. This book is dedicated to my family and is also in memory of my father, Hsiao Yuyi. The longer he is gone, the more I understand a life of suffering and loneliness.

It is said that life is like a candle, and all it needs is a spark to show its blaze of light. I feel blessed that I have met many encouraging and supportive individuals who have sparked my creative passion.
