AN ETHOS OF BLACKNESS
Black Lives in the Diaspora: Past / Present / Future is a book series that focuses on Black lives in a global diasporic context. Published in partnership with Howard University’s College of Arts and Sciences and Columbia University’s African American and African Diaspora Studies Department, it builds on Columbia University Press’s publishing programs in history, sociology, religion, philosophy, and literature as well as African American and African Diaspora studies. The series showcases scholarship and writing that enriches our understanding of Black experiences in the past, present, and future with the goal of reaching beyond the academy to intervene in urgent national and international conversations about the experiences of people of African descent. The series anchors an exchange across two global educational institutions, both located in historical capitals of Black life and culture.

Imani D. Owens, Turn the World Upside Down: Empire and Unruly Forms of Black Folk Culture in the U.S. and Caribbean

James V. Koch and Omari S. Swinton, Vital and Valuable: The relevance of HBCUs to American Life and Education

For a complete list of books in the series, please see the Columbia University Press website.