Acknowledgments

Rethinking the Inka began as papers circulated and discussed by the authors at a three-day workshop held at Villa Virginia in Pirque, Chile, in 2016 (figure 0.1), made possible through grants from the Pre-Columbian Studies program of Dumbarton Oaks, the Chilean Comisión Nacional de Investigación Científica y Tecnológica (CONICYT USA 2013-0012), and the Dirección de Investigación, Facultad de Ciencias Sociales of the Universidad de Chile (FPCI 10-0416). We thank all three sponsors and are especially grateful to Colin McEwan, then the director of the Pre-Columbian Studies program of Dumbarton Oaks, for his enthusiastic support and his insights into all things Inka. The ideas presented in the papers further benefited from the comments and questions of workshop contributors Tristan Platt, Ana María Lorandi, and Francisco Garrido and attendees Noa Corcoran-Tadd, Ester Echenique, Cristián González, Natalia La Mura, Shelby Magee, Beau Murphy, and Mariela Pino. Pablo Cruz was unable to attend but accepted our invitation to contribute a chapter on his influential work on Inka mining and metallurgy. We also thank Kelly McKenna, then of Dumbarton Oaks, for helping to ensure that the workshop ran smoothly; the administrators and staff of Villa Virginia, for their warm hospitality and delicious meals; and, most of all, the authors, for their contributions, their collegial company, and the chance to exchange and debate ideas and rethink the Inka.

Since the workshop, the field of Andean studies has experienced the tremendous loss of both Colin and Ana María. We are grateful for their many contributions and for our time together in Pirque.
Figure 0.1. Participants in the “Repensando el Tawantinsuyu desde el Qullasuyu” workshop in Pirque, Chile, May 18–20, 2016. Standing, left to right: Andrés Troncoso, César Parcero-Oubiña, Marco A. Giovannetti, Diego Salazar, Félix A. Acuto, Ian Farrington, Mariela Pino, Cristián González, Noa Corcoran-Tadd, Axel E. Nielsen, Colin McEwan, Francisco Garrido, José Luis Martínez C. Seated, left to right: Natalia La Mura, Daniel Pavlovic, Ana María Lorandi, Verónica I. Williams, Victoria Castro, Tristan Platt, Sonia Alconini, Claudia Rivera Casanovas, Shelby Magee, Beau Murphy, Frances M. Hayashida.
Rethinking the Inka