Acknowledgments

This publication, which was nearly five years in the making, is the product of many individual contributors, including the excavators, the archaeological authorities, the colleagues who have undertaken the individual studies that it comprises, the skilled technicians who prepared the materials and illustrated them, and the production staff at the Institute of Classical Archaeology in Austin (ICA) at the University of Texas. The roll call goes back to 1980 and comes up to the present, and I am sure that I have not included all those to whom we are grateful.

Few sites of the Roman Imperial period are known in the territory of Metaponto, and none has as yet been published in its entirety. I felt honored when Prof. Joseph Coleman Carter, Director of ICA, invited me to participate and take the lead role in coordinating the studies of the site and its material remains. I am grateful for all the help, including editorial work, that he and the staff at ICA have given me over these years, and I hope that the results will justify his trust. Personally, I would like to express my heartfelt gratitude to the Packard Humanities Institute for its support. There are very few such opportunities available for archaeologists working in southern Italy today as the one PHI has made possible here.

I owe much over the years to the Soprintendenza Archeologica della Basilicata, which has made it possible for me to study the materials in its collections and to participate in excavations. In particular, I owe an enormous debt of gratitude to Antonio De Siena, the current Soprintendente and for many years the Director of the National Museum of Metaponto, for his constant encouragement and the many exchanges of ideas and opinions that have contributed to the result seen here.

Particular thanks to the scientific community at ICA, which has contributed in a variety of ways and at different times to the realization of the San Biagio study. Many are among the names of collaborators listed below. Special thanks go to Esmeralda Moscatelli and Keith Swift, coordinators—administratively and scientifically—of the Metaponto farmhouse publication project. We have shared long hours and demanding work that have reinforced our professional ties and bonds of friendship. Many thanks also to the administrative and technical staff of the Soprintendenza.

Sincere gratitude and affectionate memories are addressed to those who actually carried out the excavation at San Biagio in July 1980. Its success owes much to the skill and dedication of trench supervisor Claire Lyons and foreman Giuseppe Di Taranto. For much help with logistical and administrative problems in Italy, we thank Rosetta Torracco and Tiziana Ria. Thanks also to Helga di Giuseppe for her valuable suggestions and exchange of ideas. Finally, a sincere thanks to all those who, in different ways, provided suggestions and advice. It would be impossible to mention all of them, but their contributions have been invaluable for the publication of this book.
