Acknowledgments

Thanks first to Eva Ziarek who gave me her time and ideas on early drafts of this book, to Kelly Oliver who first suggested the idea of writing it, and to an anonymous reader for Cornell University Press who made excellent suggestions for revision. I am very grateful for Elizabeth Grosz’s classes on Irigaray in the 198os and for the books and essays by Elizabeth Grosz, Margaret Whitford, Tina Chanter, and many others who have debated Irigaray’s work. I have been lucky in the intellectual community of Jennifer Biddle, Victoria Barker, Rosalyn Diprose, Robyn Ferrell, Isabel Karpin, Elizabeth Wilson, Vicki Kirby, Linnell Secomb, Cathy Vasseleu, and Natalie Stoljar, in whose company at different times the ideas in this book developed. I am also grateful to the research students who worked with me on Irigaray—Joanne Faulkner, Evelyn Swinnerton, Fran Gray, and Joanne Purcell—and other graduate, honors, and undergraduate students at the Australian National University who were so often the best part of the working week. Paul Patton, Moira Gatens, Genevieve Lloyd, Elizabeth Grosz, Margaret Whitford, and Dorothea Olkowski took the time to support research grants leading to the finished book—thank you.

Thanks also to several institutions who hosted papers on Irigaray and provided me with debate about them. I thank Kelly Oliver and the Women Studies center at the University of Texas at Austin; Eva Ziarek and the Department of English at the University of Notre Dame; Ann Smock and the Department of French, University of California at Berkeley;
Acknowledgments

Michelle Boulous Walker and the students’ society at the Department of Philosophy, University of Queensland; Hugh Silverman and the participants in the International Philosophy Seminar, Alto Adige, Italy (who generously welcomed me to the luxury of a two-week seminar on Irigaray); Laurent Milesi and the center for Critical and Cultural Theory, Cardiff University; Simon Critchley and the Department of Philosophy, University of Essex; and panel participants and organizers at many IAPLs and SPEPs. At Cornell University Press, my thanks to Catherine Rice and Susan Tarcov. Valerie Hazel’s index was much appreciated.

Finally, my thanks to some institutions, friends, and family in whose company, offices, or homes parts of this were written: the Australian National University; the American Academy in Rome Northwestern University; Madeleine Fava; Irene von Moos; Sandi Buckley and Brian Massumi; Elizabeth Wilson; Pat Morton and John Dutton; Kelly Oliver; Don and Pat Jasper; Rosanne Kennedy; Lisabeth During and Ross Poole; Victoria Barker and Tim Burgess; my parents, Pauline Payne and Max Deutscher; my terrific sister Pepita Payne; and my dear partner Michael Jasper.

My thanks to the editors for their comments about and improvement of the following essays. While none have been incorporated in their original form, I have freely drawn on them.

I gratefully acknowledge the Australian Research Council for the award of a large A.R.C. grant, and the Australian National University for internal faculty grants supporting this project.

Penelope Deutscher
A Politics of Impossible Difference