Acknowledgments

This book would not exist except for the financial support of the Foreign Policy Program of the Social Science Research Council (SSRC). The project was conceived in 1988—while we both were Foreign Policy Fellows—as a result of the Program's offer to sponsor research workshops for Fellows interested in similar topics. This enterprise dates to such a workshop in January 1989. After that discussion, we asked the SSRC to support two additional conferences in order to bring together a broad range of scholars to consider the role of ideas in politics, and especially in foreign policy. Both of these conferences, in January 1990 and April 1991, were held at the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences, Stanford, California. Participants at both conferences were critical in the shaping of this project through either their memos, their papers, or their participation: Anne-Marie Burley, Barry Eichengreen, James Fearon, Jeffry Frieden, Ernst B. Haas, Peter Haas, Peter Hall, David Lumsdaine, Richard Madsen, Bruce Bueno de Mesquita, James Morrow, Richard Moss, John Odell, Kenneth Oye, Robert Putnam, Jack Rakove, Douglas Rivers, John Ruggie, and Janice Thomson.

We thank Miles Kahler for encouraging the project in his capacity as chair of the Foreign Policy Committee of the SSRC. There would be no book were it not for his intellectual and material support.

We express our gratitude to all ten of the scholars whose papers make up this volume. Not only was their intellectual guidance critical to the success of the project, but they must be thanked as well for their patience with our not always welcomed comments and repeated demands for revisions.

Stanford, California

Cambridge, Massachusetts

JUDITH GOLDSTEIN

ROBERT O. KEOHANE