

Acknowledgments

We are exceedingly grateful to the many people who played a part in the evolution of this book. First and foremost, for the invitation to participate in the community of scholars writing books for the Sociology in the Twenty-First Century series at the University of California Press, we thank John Iceland (series editor) and Naomi Schneider (executive editor). Their ideas, feedback, and support along the way have been invaluable. We also greatly appreciate the guidance and dedication of Benjy Mailings and Summer Farah (editorial assistants) in helping finalize all parts of the book, literally from the front to back cover. This book has greatly benefited from wise recommendations offered by Roger Finke, Jerry Park, Jenny Trinitapoli, and one anonymous reviewer along the way. Their much-appreciated insights helped enrich the development of the book and hone its core contributions.

We owe a great debt to our students, friends, and colleagues at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. The curiosity and thoughtfulness of many of Lisa's SOCI 429: Religion and Society students served as inspiration and barometer for the book's content. Past and present graduate students, including Alyssa Browne, Erin Davenport, Reed DeAngelis, Katie Furl, George Hayward, Laura Krull, and Jane Lee all provided very helpful comments and edits in addition to moral support and encouragement all along the way. We owe Jessica Pearlman a great deal of thanks for her methodological expertise and her willingness to work with us on analyses for this book. Lisa is very grateful to Michele Berger and Karolyn Tyson for their insights and support in the writing process. Claire thanks her graduate student peers for their advice, perspectives, and listening ears at all stages of this project. We also thank Tania Jenkins for feedback on the conclusion. In general, we are fortunate to work in the incredibly generative and generous environments of the Department of Sociology and the Carolina Population Center where faculty, staff, and students make this work possible and rewarding.

At key moments in this journey, others stepped in to provide support. Jacquie and Nadine and the space and sustenance they provide at Easton's Nook sparked ideas and propelled the book's completion. We are also grateful to Kristy Johnson for her high-quality editing assistance with multiple chapters.

For all of these instrumental forms of support from friends and colleagues, we are forever thankful. The book has benefited greatly from their assistance. Any errors or oversights in the pages to come are owned fully by us.

Finally, we sincerely thank and express the full depth of our love and appreciation to our families for making our work and our lives richer. From the bottom of her heart, Lisa thanks Eric and Natalie for their love, grounding humor, and patience. Claire is grateful for Mac and for her family for their consistent support and love, and thanks her community of friends in Chapel Hill and beyond for their kindness and laughter.
