Acknowledgments

Like ASEAN, this book is the product of an extended process that has involved multiple renegotiations, much rethinking, and more than one cross-road. Perhaps, it is no surprise given the nature of the process that I have also accumulated a great many debts. My greatest debts are to those who provided guidance and careful comments since the project’s earliest iterations. Brantly Womack and John Echeverri-Gent at the University of Virginia not only took considerable time and care in reading early drafts but were also unfailing in their encouragement from beginning to end. In addition, I owe a particular debt to Matthew Hoffmann who read multiple drafts at later stages. I have been fortunate to have him as both colleague and friend.

This manuscript has also benefited from the conscientiousness of its anonymous reviewers. Their pointed comments and constructive critiques served to sharpen the overall argument. Thanks are additionally due to Daniel Green and Stuart Kaufman for their input on certain chapters. I am also indebted to Amitav Acharya and Richard Stubbs, both of whom offered much-appreciated encouragement and comments early in the process; David Elliott at Pomona College, who ( unbeknownst to him) put me on this path early on; Yuen Foong Khong for his support; both Muthiah Alagappa at the East-West Center and the Studies in Asian Security Series’ editorial committee for their commitment to the project; and Geoffrey Burn for his editorial guidance.
I would be most remiss if I did not also thank some of my fellow ASEAN travelers—especially Mely Caballero-Anthony, Shaun Narine, and Helen Nesadurai, whose intellectual contributions sharpened my thinking. They provided occasional voices over my shoulder, and their friendship made the process enjoyable. Thanks also to my various comrades along the way, especially Patrick Pillai and Dan Slater, both of whom will always be associated with Malaysia for me, as well as Amy Nagle, Peter Ronayne, Christine Spillane, and Kevin Tarmann.

My appreciation also goes to the ASEAN–ISIS network—with particular thanks to the Centre for Strategic and International Studies in Jakarta, ISIS-Malaysia in Kuala Lumpur, and Carolina Hernandez at the University of the Philippines for their help in facilitating interviews, access to materials, and for introducing me to the world of ASEAN “Track 2.” Thanks also to those at the Rajaratnam School of International Studies in Singapore, who have provided an intellectual community and have helped to keep me current; the various academics and officials in Bangkok, Jakarta, Kuala Lumpur, Manila, and Singapore who took time from their busy schedules to talk with me; and the ASEAN Secretariat for allowing me to include the ASEAN emblem as part of this book. The library and experts at the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies in Singapore were also invaluable resources.

This project would not have been possible without the funding provided by several institutes at various stages, including the Institute for the Study of World Politics, the Eisenhower Institute, the East Asia Center at the University of Virginia, and the University of Delaware. Thanks also to the Munke Centre at the University of Toronto, especially Joe Wong, for facilitating my ability to work on this project in its last stage. Matthew Davis offered his capable research assistance.

Of course, nothing would be possible or meaningful without the love and support of family. To Mom, Dad, and the best siblings in the world, thanks for always being there for me.