In preparing the book, we have benefited from numerous comments from colleagues, students, venture capitalists, business angels, entrepreneurs, and friends.

Over the years, an impressive group of reviewers and adopters have provided comments that have sharpened the presentation. Ilan Guedj (University of Texas, Austin), Frank Kerins (Montana State University), and several anonymous reviewers provided detailed comments on the current edition. We also benefited from comments on editions of the earlier book, including those of Robin Anderson (University of Nebraska), Sanjai Bhagat (University of Colorado), Carol Billingham (Central Michigan University), Carol Marie Boyer (Clarkson University), Daniel Donoghue (Discovery Group), Fernando Fabre (Endeavor and Universidad Anahuac de Sur), Samuel Gray (New Mexico State University), Thomas Hellmann (Stanford University), Glenn Hubbard (Columbia University), William C. Hudson (St. Cloud University), Steve Kaplan (University of Chicago), Jill Kickul (DePaul University), Sandy Klasa (University of Arizona), Kenji Kutsuna (Kobe University), Daniel McConaughy (California State University, Northridge), James Nelson (Florida State University), Bill Petty (Baylor University), Edward Rogoff (Baruch College), Chip Ruscher (University of Arizona), Bob Schwartz (Silver Fox Advisors), James Seward (University of Wisconsin, Madison), Jeffrey Sohl (University of New Hampshire), Howard Van Auken (Iowa State University), Nikhil Varaiya (San Diego State University), and Edward Williams (Rice University). We also thank our many colleagues at the Claremont Colleges, UC Riverside, and Babson College.
We are especially indebted to several enterprising students who helped with the development of the website, the simulation software, tutorials, and related materials: Scott Butler, Kevin Hanley, Mike Hanley, Chris Penka, and Way Yu. Thanks also to those students in our classes who read and worked through early drafts of the book and website. These include undergraduate and MBA students from UC Riverside and Chapman University, MBA, executive MBA, and undergraduate students from the Claremont Colleges. We very much appreciate their goodwill and thoughtful suggestions.

A number of practitioners, including venture capitalists, venture funds managers, entrepreneurs, and angel investors, were very generous in sharing their experiences and providing ideas for cases and other book material. Special thanks to Andy Horowitz, Russ Shields, John Sibert, Richard Sudek, Luann Bangsund, Luis Villalobos, John Jasper, John Kensey, Thomas Gephart, Kazuhiko Yamamoto, and Yoshi Bunya. In particular, their insights on valuation practices and deal negotiations and their willingness to challenge academic theory have added institutional richness to the book.

We extend special thanks to Margo Beth Crouppen, of Stanford University Press, who saw the value in developing an advanced applied book on entrepreneurial finance.

Janet Kiholm Smith
Claremont, California

Richard L. Smith
Riverside, California

Richard T. Bliss
Wellesley, Massachusetts