ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

THE IMPETUS FOR THIS BOOK came from a workshop I codirected with Farid El-Khazen of the American University in Beirut at the fifth Mediterranean Social and Political Research Meeting, organized by the Robert Schuman Center for Advanced Studies of the European University Institute (EUI), in Montecatini Terme, Italy, in March 2004. This conference gave us the opportunity to gather Arab, American, and European scholars for a workshop to discuss the dynamics within and the durability of Arab authoritarianism. The EUI's and Imco Brouwer's personal support of the project, through sponsoring that workshop but also in its aftermath, is gratefully acknowledged. Initially the volume was to be coedited by the workshop directors, but Farid had other obligations that prevented him from participating further. Yet I am glad that through his efforts and work during the review process of more than 60 paper proposals for the workshop and through his ideas, he significantly influenced this volume.

After I had left Tübingen University in 2004, Dirk Messner of the German Development Institute (DIE) in Bonn made it possible for me to continue to work on the book at that institute. The DIE also readily funded language and style editing. I am grateful to Deborah Ann Rice for improving our (nonnative speakers') English with diligence. Moreover, the organization of the manuscript, the revisions of individual chapters, and the compilation of the bibliography would have been impossible without the assistance of Nathalie Bouchez, Stephanie Portoff, Jennifer Mansey, Maria Josua, and Kevin Köhler.
Several authors had to update or rewrite their contributions because unforeseen circumstances prolonged the process more than anticipated, including health reasons that kept me away from work for almost half a year. The contributors' constant encouragement and readiness to help and stay onboard is exceptional. I am grateful to this fine team of authors, who, despite all obstacles, still valued the book as their preferred outlet and upon whose patience I depended. Many of them not only wrote their own chapters but felt personally responsible for the outcome as a whole and generously lent their help, encouragement, and advice in many instances. Most of all, I am indebted to Holger Albrecht, who not only discussed and accompanied the project with me from the first ideas in 2002 to June 2006 but also helped several authors revise their chapters, rereview them, and discuss them. Apart from Stanford University Press and myself, Holger has the greatest share in the realization of this book. Roger Owen accompanied the project with constructive criticism up to the final stages of the manuscript, and Kate Wahl, Kirsten Oster, and Carolyn Brown of Stanford University Press were always there when help was needed during these stages and during production so that collaboration was a pleasure. Last but not least, I would not have had the energy for this project without the continuous support provided by Anni and by my parents, to whom I dedicate this book.
