I wish to thank friends, colleagues, and family members who helped me while writing this book. I am grateful, and extremely proud, that four prominent scholars read this book: Sasson Somekh, Dina Rizk Khoury, Peter Wien, and Rashid I. Khalidi. Their thoughtful works informed the ways in which I think about nationalism and modernity, and I feel truly privileged to have them comment on my work. I also wish to express my gratitude to my friend and mentor, Israel Gershoni, a constant source of inspiration and support.

I deeply thank my friends and colleagues at the University of Chicago: Tahera Qutbuddin, Holly Shissler, Cornell Fleischer, McGuire Gibson, Kay Heikkinen, Theo van Den Hout, Wadad Kadi, Farouk Mustafa, Wäel Hindo, Leora Auslander, Noha Forster, Rusty Rook, Basil Salem, Tolga Cora, Cihangir Gundogdu, Rana Barakat, Erol Ulker, Joe Yackley, and Basima Bazargan. In particular, I am grateful to Frank Lewis and Fred Donner, for their advice, for their innovative ideas, and for being such fantastic colleagues over the past years. Parts of this book were written at the Franke Institute for the Humanities at the University of Chicago. The leadership of Jim Chandler, the perceptive commentary by my fellows, Rebecca Hasselbach in particular, and the kind assistance of Margot Browning and Harriette Moody helped making this a better a work. I also wish to express my thanks to the Dean of Humanities, Martha Roth.

I am grateful to dear friends and colleagues whose insightful commentary I very much appreciated over the years: Didier Monciaud, Hanan Hammad, Marilyn Booth, Hala Fattah, Leyla Dakhli, Sami Zubaida, Eve Troutt Powell,
Joel Beinin, Geraldine Chatelard, Keith Watenpaugh, and Ami Ayalon. I also wish to express my deepest gratitude to Daniel McNaughton, Andrew Frisardi, Mariana Raykov, and to Kate Wahl, the best editor an author could wish for.

I was privileged to work with the dedicated staff in the library of the Babylonian Jewry Heritage Center in Or Yehuda (Israel). A special word of appreciation is due to the late Yerahmiel Assa, as well as to Menashe Somekh and Moshe Hakham who were gracious enough to converse with me at length about their experiences in Iraq of the 1940s and shaped many directions which this book has taken.

Ovadia Ezra was always there for me, as were Youval Rotman and Kobi Auslander. I have no idea what I would have done without my dear friends Arnika Fuhrmann, Lucy Pick, and Persis Berlekamp whose understanding, talents, humor, and brilliance were so encouraging, at every step of the way.

Finally, I thank my wonderful parents, Yossi and Rachel Bashkin, for their love, support, guidance, and their many meaningful contributions to this book, and to my life.

It is a source of great remorse that my friend Oded Pilavsky could not see this book; it now seems as if the chapter on the communists was written especially for him. I dedicate this book to the memory of my beloved grandparents, Mina and Ze’ev Bashkin. I do miss them very much and am grateful for the many invaluable lessons they have taught me.
