Contents

Preface 5

1 The Epistemologist's Dilemma: A Reasonable Quest for Truth 15

1.1 Truth-Conducivity 16
1.1.1 Truth-Conducivity and Likelihood 18
1.1.2 Truth-Conducivity - an Amendment 41

1.2 Externalism and Internalism 44
1.2.1 Internalism 48
1.2.2 Externalism 54
1.2.3 In Defense of Internalism 62
1.2.3.1 Arguing against Externalism by Counterexamples 62
1.2.3.2 The Children-and-Animals-Objection 66
1.2.3.3 The Skepticism Objection 69
1.2.3.4 The Externalist Confusion 81

1.3 Against Justification 85
1.3.1 The Relativity of Justification 86
1.3.2 Knowledge without Justification 93

2 Coherence and the World Connection 99

2.1 Coherence and Truth-Conducivity 100
2.1.1 What is Coherence? 101
2.1.2 The Problem of the World Connection 106

2.2 The First Attempt: BonJour’s Observation Requirement 110
2.2.1 BonJour’s Characterization of Coherence 111
2.2.2 The Role of Observation in BonJour’s Coherence Theory 116

2.2.3 BonJour’s Answers to the Three Objections 123
2.2.4 Two Arguments against BonJour’s Solution 130

2.3 The Second Attempt: Davidson’s Appeal to Language 133
2.3.1 Davidson on Coherence and Truth 134
3 Perception, Coherence and Knowledge 165
   3.1 The Role of Perception 167
      3.1.1 Sensation and Perception 168
      3.1.2 Conceptual versus Nonconceptual Content 181
         3.1.2.1 In Defense of Nonconceptuality of Perceptual Content 182
         3.1.2.2 Against Nonconceptuality of Perceptual Content 193
      3.1.3 Triangulation and Perception 199
      3.1.4 Perception without Empiricism 211
   3.2 Genetic Foundations and Epistemic Coherence 219
      3.2.1 Objective Truth-Conducivity and Genetic Foundations 219
      3.2.2 Subjective Truth-Conducivity and Epistemic Coherence 230
         3.2.2.1 Laurence BonJour: Inferential Coherence 237
         3.2.2.2 Keith Lehrer: Coherence in Terms of Meeting Objections 239
      3.2.3 Knowledge as Coherent True Belief 243

Bibliography 259
For my teachers Joachim Minnemann, Howard Jackson and Peter Ulrich. Without them, there would have been darkness.