

Contents

Section A

Juliana Goschler and Susanne Niemeier

Introduction: Cognitive approaches to L2 learning and teaching — 3

Lynn Anthonissen and Tanja Mortelmans

German modals in second language acquisition: A constructionist approach — 9

Sabine Jentges

„Im Deutschen kan das nicht“ – Text type didactics for the teaching of German modal verb constructions — 31

Elsa Liste Lamas

Path encoding in German as a foreign language: Difficulties encountered by L1 Spanish learners — 47

Daniela Caluianu

One step closer to the target: Using Construction Grammar to teach the expression of motion events to Japanese learners of English — 67

Section B

Jörg Roche and Ferran Suñer

Metaphors and grammar teaching — 89

Valentina Gradel

The acquisition of the German case system by foreign language learners through computer animations based on cognitive linguistics — 113

Katsiaryna EL-Bouz (née Kanaplianik)

Animation of grammar – Interplay of cognitive linguistics and multimedia learning: The example of German modal auxiliaries — 135

Ingo Fehrmann

Teaching the form-function mapping of German ‘prefield’ elements using Concept-Based Instruction — 153

Ronald Kemsies

Frame-based instruction: Teaching polysemous nouns in the L2 — 171

Dorothee Kohl-Dietrich, Constanze Juchem-Grundmann and Wolfgang Schnotz
Conceptual motivation as a tool for raising language awareness in the English as a foreign language classroom – Does it enhance learning outcomes? Insights from an empirical study — 193

Anwar Almuoseb

A lexical-semantic analysis of the English prepositions at, on and in and their conceptual mapping onto Arabic — 211

Section C

Heike Behrens, Karin Madlener and Katrin Skoruppa

The role of scaffolding in children’s questions: Implications for (preschool) language assessment from a usage-based perspective — 237

Jannis Kounatidis

Destabilisation, IL variation and restructuring in foreign language learning — 261

Gale Stam

Gesture as a window onto conceptualization in multiple tasks: Implications for second language teaching — 289